But they had a happier little story than this to tell in the smaller mammal house where Buldo and little Tommy died." It was about the little sun bear and the Red River hog. They have no name for the sun bear, but they ought to have; for of all animals in the Zoo the writer saw none that had one quarter of the personality that was embodied within the black fur of the bow-legged little sun bear. His face was preternaturally wise in expression, and his ears were so big and they stuck out so ridiculously from his head, and his eyes were so keen and bright, and his lips so mobile and full of humor, and he looked at you in such a way that you laughed in spite of yourself. You almost felt like sticking your hand between the bars and saying:

"Shake, old pal; have you heard the latest funny story they are telling downtown?"

Well, somehow or other this sun bear, let's call him Little Billy, learned that at night the keeper did not snap the padlock on his cage door, but instead ran a staple through the hasp. Long days of investigation, or observation rather, showed him that the cage of the Red River hog was confined in the same way. One night when everything was quiet, Little Billy got up on his hind legs, reached his paw through the bars and pulled out the staple and opened the door. Leaving the cage he made his way along the gutter that runs in front, and pulled out the staple which locked the door of the hog's cage. And then what do you think! He closed the door after him—very softly. He did not want the hog to escape. Of course not.

In the morning the keepers, hearing a series of delighted porcine grunts and ursine woofs, hurried down to the cage and found Little Billy flapping about the cage, playing tag with the hog, which had entered delightedly into the sport.

And such a good time were they having that Mr. Ditmars allowed them to stay together all day. Then they put Little Billy back again. He spent some months studying a new contrivance devised by the keeper to secure the door without snapping the padlock, and last week he opened it again. Now they keep the padlock snapped all the time, and all day Little Billy sits there thinking about this new scheme of security, and pondering new ideas; for he enjoyed that game of tag with the Red River hog and he will not rest in peace until he repeats it.

In Bronx Park they say that rattlesnakes and burrowing owls and prairie dogs have been known to live together in the same holes, but at the same time they added young owls and young prairie dogs have been found in the interior of rattlesnakes, and so the hospitality of the rattlers may be set down as not entirely self-sacrificing or devoid of selfishness.

Out in the big animal station which Bartels & Co. maintain on the Hackensack meadows they have additional evidence to give of animal friendship, and here they go even deeper into the question than they do at Bronx Park, assigning as the motive for this friendship the instinctive pity that animals, whether human or otherwise, feel for the weak.

"That's all it is, and nothing more," said a keeper. "Half the time when a wild animal, one of the big fellows, gets off color and needs some warm blood, we throw in a live animal, a dog or a cat, and the big beast will not touch it. In fact, he is likely to go to the other extreme and make friends. Naturally, this depends upon the nature of the beast, for a bad-tempered tiger or lion or leopard will eat anything. But then, again, as I say, the instinct of friendship and protection for the weak frequently triumphs over their hunger."

A noteworthy instance of this occurred a month or so ago at this animal farm. In a cage they had a big Bengal man-eater, full grown, designed for shipment to Germany. This fellow got off on his feed, and it was decided to give him a live animal. The Secretary of the Bartels Company some weeks before had purchased a yellow mongrel, to be used, as he put it, for "snake food." The dog was kept in the New York office, at 160 Greenwich Street, and seemed so intelligent that the Secretary decided to preserve him for some better resting place than the interior of a boa constrictor.

About the time that the tiger went off his feed the Secretary paid a visit to the farm, and the dog followed him. Here, then, was just the place for the cur—in the reeking maw of the tiger. So, without a thought, he seized him by the scruff of the neck and tossed him in. The dog cowered in a corner and the tiger walked majestically over and sniffed him for a few seconds, and then walked away. The Secretary returned to New York a few hours later, leaving the dog behind.

When he visited the farm the following day he was edified by the sight of the dog, perched upon the tiger's back, tugging with might and main at one of the big cat's ears. For a while the Bengal did not object, and when he did he simply rolled over on his back and sent the cur spinning with a blow from his padded paw. They were such good friends by the time set for shipment of the tiger to Europe that the keepers did not dare part the two and so they were put aboard the steamer in the same cage. For aught the Bartels people know, the tiger and his friend are still together.

An interesting point about this friendship—and it has been noticed before in animal friendships where a dog is concerned—was that the tiger seemed to appreciate the fact that the dog had more sense than he had. And so whenver anything made him nervous—the rush of a train or a red parasol, he would instinctively turn to the dog, and the dog, being accustomed to human beings and things of the world, always reassured him. On the other hand, when the keeper on the Bartels farm made as though to whip the mongrel the dog always knew that he would be comparatively safe right under the tiger's legs, and he was safe, and the keeper knew it better than any one else. It is rather an ideal partnership, is it not, the worldly knowledge of the dog and the strength of the tiger?

Devoted friendships between elephants and dogs and cats are well known. In the Central Park menagerie the elephants are on good terms with several cats, who sleep against their legs and in other ways show their utter contentment in the society of their Brobdingnagian friends. Over in Coney Island two years ago the trick elephant Alice, and Jack, a full-grown tiger, worked together beautifully, and in many ways showed that their feeling for each other was something more than the result of the work of the trainers.

Animals of a like species are often placed together, and in the large zoos where male lions or tigers are confined in the same cage it is as much as the lives of the keepers are worth to separate them, and certainly the interests of peace and harmony at the Zoo suggest that no such change be made once the animals have been placed in the same cage and have grown to like one another.

And yet as in human affairs things occur to break these friendly relations. The case of Pollux and Prince, the Hagenbeck lions who were brought to this city from Chicago in 1894, comes to mind. They had been in the same cage for months and were on the terms of the greatest friendliness. They shared their food without fighting or snarling, and demeaned themselves as two kings should. But Mignon the lioness came between them and one Sunday morning occurred one of the most desperate fights which man ever witnessed between animals in captivity. The fight lasted an hour, at the end of which time Pollux dragged himself whining to his corner, beaten almost to death.

Separate cages were necessary after that, but this is an exceptional ending to animal friendships, of which it may be said that as a general thing once they are formed they are abiding, constant, and consistent—explain the fact as one may.

The New Cancer Treatment---Its Theory and Method of Operation

THE case of Dr. Harper, President of Chicago University, has attracted wide attention. From a condition due to the advanced development of an unmistakably cancerous growth which put his valuable life in jeopardy he has so far progressed toward recovery that he can give attention to his exigent duties and believes he is getting well. A brief explanation of how he has been treated and upon what theory will be of interest and value to many persons who have come to regard the development of cancer as equivalent to a death warrant, and for whom it seems the worst of earthly misfortunes. Anything which holds out a reasonable hope that cancer may be cured is sure to appeal to the whole world.

It is well known that certain solutions—quinine, aesculin, fluorescin, and many others—are rendered fluorescent by radioactivity and by the X-ray. If any of such solutions is applied internally, time being allowed for the saturation by it of the blood vessels, and radium rays or X-rays are applied to a particular organ that may be diseased—to a cancer in the stomach or the liver, for instance—there is set up in the part affected an active stimulus which promotes the process of making new and normal tissue. In other words, as skin diseases may be cured by the application of the Finsen and other lights, so internal diseases may be cured by the creation—through fluorescence produced by radium rays—of light within the body.

The discussion of this subject would seem to have narrowed itself down to [illegible] treatment. A certain section of the medical profession claims—with apparently inexplicable insistence—that the treatment has no merit; that "liquid moonshine" would be a more fitting name for it than "liquid sunshine," the name by which it is often spoken of; and that, in point of fact, the solutions claimed to be fluorescent will not fluoresce at all under the influence of the radium emanations. In other quarters it has been as strenuously maintained that the new treatment is destined to banish forever the terrors of cancer and kindred scourges.

The experiments of Rutherford and Soddy have shown that the radiations from radium are of three (and possibly of four) kinds, and they early divided these radiations into three distinct types, the Alpha rays, the Beta rays, and the Gamma rays. Further investigation showed that a gaseous emission also occurred, which they called the radium emanations. The Alpha rays constitute about 95 per cent. of the total disintegration, the Beta rays a small percentage, and the Gamma rays still less. The Alpha rays are positive electricity, or, if not positive electricity, particles of matter conveying positive charges of electricity. The Beta rays are negative electricity, or, if not strictly units of negative electricity, particles of matter carrying negative charges. The Gamma rays, on the other hand, are ethereal vibrations resembling the Roentgen ray and also ordinary light.

Radium was first utilized in medicine in glass tubes. Through glass could escape only the Gamma rays, the rays resembling light. The next therapeutic step was to put the radium within aluminium [illegible] but also the Beta rays were brought into active use. A later step, in which Mr. Lieber has taken a prominent part, has been to use the radium as far naked as possible—that is to say, without any envelope whatever. In this way it would be possible to secure the effect of the Alpha rays and the emanations. But naked radium itself could not be inserted into the human flesh, as it would cause death if dissolved in the blood. The so-called naked radium must therefore be protected with a thick coat of varnish. The varnish tube allows more of the radium emanations and radiations to escape than either the aluminium or the glass, and exactly to that extent is an improvement in some conditions of administration. Thus, for tumors in favorable localities, as for instance upon the surface, where they may be watched, this method has been adopted with advantage by various practitioners.

The fundamental fact that certain fluids introduced into the system are there rendered highly active through the influence of radium rays was shown—in Dr. Morton's address on "Fluorescence Artificially Produced in the Human Organism," at the St. Louis International Electrical Congress—to have been fully established in Germany and elsewhere. A well-known physician, on being asked as to this principle and its utilisation, said:

"What Dr. Morton did was to take a step further than that involved in using sunlight or the Finsen light and such fluorescent agencies, and to establish by direct physical experiment that the radiations of the X-ray and of radium, in themselves another kind of light, would [illegible] Finsen light were confined solely to action upon the surface, because the Finsen light or sunlight did not penetrate the body. Dr. Morton's extension of this beautiful doctrine enabled him to obtain the action of fluorescent substances in the interior of the body. His step was one of invention—the utilisation of well-known facts to produce a new result."

It has recently been denied that radium and X radiation can set up fluorescence in fluids. Such denial is futile in the face of an experiment which any tyro can make for himself. Take a weak solution of quinine or a weak solution of fluorescin in water, equivalent to about one-eighth of a grain to a pint of water, and go into the dark room with a tube of aluminium containing high-powered radium, and insert this tube into the liquid. Before making the combination, observe that neither the radium tube nor the fluorescent liquid is emitting any light. Bring the two together by immersing the tube in the liquid, and the result is inevitable. A faint glow, like that of the Milky Way, may be seen to diffuse itself throughout the liquid. The glow will be strongest at the surfaces of the tube, and will weaken as it spreads outward. On such a simple experiment rests the entire physical basis of what Dr. Morton has claimed. If it is true, his claims stand; if it is false his claims fall. (To convince himself of the character of this test, the writer took a celluloid test tube filled with a solution of fluorescin and aesculin into a dark closet, and applied radium to the tube. In an instant the fluorescence shone out brightly.)

But [illegible] ment, the question naturally follows: "What are the benefits to which it may possibly lead?"

Light is well recognized by all scientific men as being one of the essentials of normal growth and vitality, as well in the animal kingdom as in the vegetable. To give a concrete instance: In a dark cellar a potato sends forth long white sprouts several feet in length and absolutely unhealthy in appearance, but if the cellar windows be opened the potato foliage becomes green and normal in aspect. The fluorescent method above described would seem to have for its explanation the fact that light is introduced within the human being's interior very much as light was introduced within the cellar mentioned. It must not be thought that very great quantities of light were necessarily employed. If such were the case no human being could stand it, nor did Nature mean that a great quantity of light should exist within our interiors. That some light such as derived from sunlight will enter tissue can be demonstrated by holding the ear before a hole in a partition where a beam of light penetrates. The ear will be rendered translucent by the light that passes through it.

A simpler experiment would be to hold the glass bulb of a common incandescent light in the hand and observe that the flesh between the bones of the fingers is illuminated like pink wax by the translucent light which is penetrating the flesh. This nicely shows that light can penetrate flesh and that flesh in the process of evolution was so constituted to light that it could be penetrated. The [illegible] said interior, being more or less in diseased condition, with light, we shall have a more normal development of the cell activities, and in this manner overcome those perversions of cell growth which constitute disease.

Such a treatment can be called interior phototherapy, in contrast to the already existing and well-known exterior phototherapy, or applications of light in disease. This is the sole basis on which Dr. Harper's case has been treated. There is no question of killing microbes or germs. It is simply a matter, by means of the introduction of an internal agency called light, of inducing the cancer cells to refrain from their abnormal production. An aluminium tube is laid on the skin nearest the part affected and worn for six hours. The wearing of the tube for the specified time daily is continued, its position being changed slightly with every application, so as to obviate the chance of burning the skin by the radium rays. The usual effect on those who are subjected to this treatment is first seen in a great improvement in their general health—a strengthening in the processes of vitality. The pale patient begins to exhibit color, to eat better, to stay out of bed longer, and to walk further. As the health improves the disease lessens its grip.

The exact status and possibilities of this treatment in a case which has aroused intense interest throughout the scientific world are thus stated by Dr. Morton:

"In Dr. Harper's case a tumor about the size of two fists has actually been reduced to a tumor of about the size of a [illegible] patient who could [illegible] able to work nine hours a day at his university duties; a patient whose life had been despaired of and was given up, who had 'only a few months to live,' and who bravely met that pronouncement, restored to what for the moment appears to be very nearly his normal health.

"No one can say to exactly what extent this improvement will continue. It is simply a question of doing the best that can be done. There is no question in this method of curing cancer per se; there is no question of a specific cure for cancer, or of a cure-all. There is, indeed, no claim that any two cases will act exactly alike. It is recognized that we are a long way off yet from the absolute cure of cancer, and the most that can be said for this method is that it largely increases the percentage of cures: that the chances for the patient's recovery are better than they were before, and than they would be without this treatment. It enters into competition with surgery. There is [illegible] of work to do where surgery is unavailable.

"It is probable that the cure of [illegible] will never be found until the cause of the disease is known, and that is one of the profound mysteries of medicine, impenetrable as yet even at its outposts. When the causation of cancer is announced we may expect that a cure will soon be discovered.

"In the meantime, as I have already said when putting forth these views to the medical profession, experiments must take place, deductions must be drawn, a certain degree of eventual success may be reached, and yet, after all, it may be found finally that we are on the wrong track. The present effort is in itself tentative, and, what is lost sight of, equally applicable to many other diseases besides cancer. It has merely been that a conspicuous patient and conspicuous [illegible]

Theodosia Garrison on Magazine Poets and Poetry

Shouldn't Take Themselves Too Seriously or Expect to Live Very Luxuriously on the Revenues Derived from the Sale of Their Product---Confessions of a Successful Magazine Poetess, Who Admits Having Written Miles of Verse.

"I suppose I've written ten thousand miles of verse."

IS magazine poetry respectfully read?" asked a man in the newspaper office who was an authority.

Whenever he spoke the corps of writers that sit around the room on the outskirts of the sanctum prick up their ears and summon their brightest repartee.

Some one suggested that Richard Watson Gilder ought to know something about that, another glanced up from a couple of new books he was reviewing at the same time and wanted to know if "poems were paid for," while the office boy, who has a solemn contempt for literature, but is studying the art of illustration, turned his back on the whole lot of us and got into an undertone conversation over the telephone.

"How do poets live?" asked a man who had made a specialty of headlines.

"Why do they live?" suggested the associate editor with a look that would have made a poet wish he was dead.

"Is there lunch money in a sonnet?" queried an outside man who was paid by the inch and lived on what he could borrow.

"How many rondeaus to a French table d'hote. Would a rondel be considered a good security by the hotel clerk? Could one hand a waiter an envoi for his tip?"

These and other worldly estimates of the promethean fire were rapidly offered as suggestive of the popular distinction into which poetry of the short and sweet kind one reads in magazines had fallen.

"Just so. Find out something about it," said the authority, as he turned his attention to an article on cricket, sent in by Henry James.

A great deal is written about the heroism of war correspondents, and their photographs always reveal the negligee horror of their experiences when they pause in the midst of whistling bullets and the roar of cannon to pose on horseback for an eagle camera, but nothing is ever said about the newspaper man in New York who is sent to "find out" things. The things that man has to do sometimes to "find out" would make even a trained war correspondent deferential to him.

"Is magazine poetry respectfully read?" I kept saying to myself as I turned over in my mind what living authority I could find in New York who would tell me something about it without violence.

The poets whom I knew were either in Europe, Africa, Hawaii, or Indiana, or else they were in New York working at something else, anything they could get. I dropped in at the magazine offices and casually inquired if they could recommend a poet who received real money from them, and who would submit to an interview touching his or her most sacred literary nerve centres.

Five of them recommended Theodosia Garrison, four thought Bliss Carman might be good if I could get him under ether, and one said Richard Le Gallienne might do it, if it was to be a signed article.

There were some stray desultory suggestions about people who wrote poetry for magazines that nobody knew very well, but as they were mostly trade publications they might be said to be "unavailable."

I had often seen the name of Theodosia Garrison in the best Magazines, and also in some of the better ones, and in one or two good ones; in fact, when I thought it over, it seemed to me that I had scarcely ever opened a magazine without seeing some verses by Theodosia Garrison. I had never met her, although I had read her poetry. For instance, in the Christmas number of a magazine I had read these lines written by her:

STAINS.
By Theodosia Garrison.

The three ghosts on the lonesome road
Spake each to one another,
"Whence came that stain about your mouth
No lifted hand may cover?"
"From eating of forbidden fruit,
Brother, my brother."

The three ghosts on the sunless road
Spake each to one another,
"Whence came that red burn on your foot
No dust or ash may cover?"
"I stamped a neighbor's hearth-flame out,
Brother, my brother."

The three ghosts on the windless road
Spake each to one another,
"Whence came that blood upon your hand
No other hand may cover?"
"From breaking of a woman's heart,
Brother, my brother."

"Yet on the earth clean man we walked,
Glutton and Thief and Lover;
White flesh and fair it hid our stains
That no man might discover."
"Naked the soul goes up to God,

All her poetry that I remembered had the same note of sincere feeling, of symbolic grace and fancy. It was all serious poetry, as distinguished from the dialect verse, the humorous quip, and the freak rhymes that are classed as poetry because of their difference from prose. There was the dignity of stanzas about the work of Theodosia Garrison—an allegro instinct, an andante mood, a reverence that she inspired in her verse—that no mere lyrical spasm could produce. There was nothing of the airy persiflage of the comic-opera sentimentality in her work; it was always lofty in purpose and successful in its execution. She was singularly representative of magazine poetry, and surprisingly prolific. And she was living in New York, in an uptown apartment, so without further research I called upon her.

To the great army of young and old, rich and poor, that contributed persistently to the world's vibrating thought in verse, let me say that Theodosia Garrison's estimate, her point of view, and her achievements as a versifier for magazines should be a light upon the darkness of their despair. Like the old proverb telling us wisely that one "swallow does not make a Summer," learn that one poem does not make a successful magazine poet. Also avoid the fine frenzy one reads about, cultivate moderation in dress and pompadours, and try as hard as you can not to take yourself seriously. And again, do not fancy that the magazines expect you to live exclusively on the poetry you write for them, for although they pay you much, they expect but little from you.

There have been stories, magazine stories, that have told about the "starving poet," how he was found in an attic, his cold fingers in a death clutch on a piece of rye bread which even the rats couldn't relish, and as one read a few verses put in to fill up the last page of that story in the magazine one's heart grew soft and sad as one read the poet's signature.

But all that is quite untrue and unnecessary.

Theodosia Garrison is the wife of a lawyer and his practice is something Mrs. Garrison said she appreciated immensely. In fact, except for that, she told me, she didn't think she would be able to write poetry for the magazines. It was he who made it possible for her to adorn the tops and bottoms of magazine pages with verse. She was very buoyant and happy, showed no evidences of carking care or midnight oil, and took the whole idea of being a poet with a grain of salt.

"I suppose I've written ten thousand miles of verse," she said gayly; "enough to run a trolley line from here to Long Branch, but just about three times in my life I may have done something that was worth while—just touched the thing I thought was good."

"Always serious poems?"

"Don't say poems—verses, lines. Yes, I suppose you'd call them serious; they're always the death and disease kind."

"Sonnets?"

"I don't know; I don't try to evolve any particular form; the sonnet is such an old gentleman sort of thing."

"Rondeaus?" I suggested.

"Perhaps rondeaus and rondels and envois and all the rest of the tribe, but really I don't rely upon that sort of thing. Anything that aspires to translate the beauty in life."

"Could one live by writing poetry for magazines?"

"I shouldn't be here talking to you now if one could," she said very positively. "I always receive very meekly whatever is given me, and I sometimes get a Spring hat, or a pair of shoes from some promethean spark that is accepted, but I shouldn't think one could obtain a steady diet from writing verses for the magazines. Of course, there are poets who publish whole books of poetry, and their books sell, so that the royalties come in quite regularly, but poems in magazines are usually available as tail pieces at the bottom of the pages. I've read about poets who work in a cellar, and I should think it is quite possible, although I have an exalted spot in the air shaft where I work," she added, pointing toward a quiet back room of her apartment.

Of course, inspiration is not a tangible asset, but as I looked at the air shaft eerie where so much magazine poetry had been written, I asked Mrs. Garrison if she thought that the poetry in magazines was inspired.

"You mean is there any real Greek fire in it?" she asked with a mock seriousness of expression. "Well I've never tried Greek fire myself, although for amusement only I've used roman candles. Seriously I think the tendency of magazine poetry is for the normal in verse. The poets who are regular contributors to the magazines are trying to look as normal as possible, too. It's no longer necessary to dress eccentrically, to wear long hair, or anything of that sort. I never dress in Greek robes, or carry a palm leaf, or wear a wreath or anything like that."

"Do the editors recognize promethean fires when they see them?"

"Well, if you read the magazines, you will see some conspicuously rocky verse. Of course, I think most of it is good."

"Do people read it?" I asked.

"I think so, and some appreciate it. My husband, for instance, is very non-literary, but he sometimes reads my verses, although he never will go with me to any literary gathering, for he always says, 'Supposing somebody should ask me what I thought of Homer, for instance?' and he shivers so that I have to change the subject and turn on the heat."

"How did you come to write poetry?" I persisted, edging away from the flippancies of the subject, and being brought back to a realization of the unimportance of magazine verse.

"Because I found I could express myself better in that way, it came easily to me. I was always very fond of poetry, and read a great deal of it, and so I began to write it. I never tried to get the opinion of friends about my verses, but just sent them right in to the magazines and waited. The tension of waiting was greater than the tension of writing. I think almost anybody can write verse, if you are born with a special knack for it. It's a little hard for some people, but it's quite natural to me. There really is not much work in writing lines for a magazine."

"Some of the magazines reject poetry?"

"Yes, I've had the little slips come back. I think everybody has. I don't believe any writer has ever had every line accepted, although I've heard poets boast that they never had a line rejected by an editor in their lives. It's absurd; just think of the editors there are," she added with a whimsical little smile.

"The magazines are not unanimous in their standard of verse?"

"Well, their standard is generally pretty good, although it varies."

"Do embryo poets write to you for advice?" I asked, recalling the influx of Spring poetry at this season of the year.

"Oh, yes. I get letters from people who ask me for a few kind words about their poetry. The best thing about being a poet is, that you can be anything else, and you may still be suspected of poetic gifts. A man may be a coal heaver or a wine man, a butcher's boy, and still write good magazine verse. I had a letter the other day from a man in the tin business, who sent me reams of poetry."

"Good poetry?"

"Fairly good. For instance, some of it runs something like this:

If you find there's a leak in your roof
Do not wait and hold yourself aloof;
Just go to a tinner,
By name Mr. Binner,
And he'll fix it for you in a woof!

"I suppose the 'woof' was poetic license, indicating the breeziness with which Mr. Binner would come when called."

"Is that a sample of the embryo poet's work?"

"Yes, I think it is. People usually know when they've written anything that's approximately good, and send it direct to the magazines."

Mrs. Theodosia Garrison did not feel that the writing of verses for magazines was an important matter; it was not at all a practical calling, and something to be indulged in apologetically. Still, there were people who were very painstaking with their verse and with other things, and these people often relied upon the time they had spent upon their achievement as an evidence of its value.

"An old lady sent me a beautifully crocheted collar by mail the other day. I don't know how she got my address," said Mrs. Garrison, "and wrote a little note saying that she had worked on the collar for two years, and she would reluctantly part with it for a dollar. There was nothing else to do but send her the dollar, because any woman is at least entitled to 50 cents a year for her labor. That idea might work well with the magazine editors. If a poem were sent them over which the poet said he had worked two years, I am quite sure they would see the value of it. A good deal of poetry in magazines is written for nothing, the poets being only too glad to blossom into print."

Mrs. Garrison had never written any humorous poetry for magazines, and yet her point of view was distinctly humorous.

"If I had time I should have worn a toga and a wreath of bay leaves," she told the artist.

Her attitude toward the magazine poet and magazine poetry was indicative. Not that she seriously belittled her own efforts, because Mrs. Garrison has written and is writing some charming verse, but everything has its ratio of proportion, and she very generously disclosed her perspective of contemporary poetry in modern magazines. It is a fairly accurate perspective. The magazines do not value poetry intrinsically, but merely as an adornment in the make-up of their pages, and the question as to whether it was respectfully read was answered by Mrs. Garrison when she said: "People read it as an olive is eaten, something neither nourishing nor necessary, just a flavor between the courses."

And as to that other matter of how do poets live, all was answered when Mrs. Garrison acknowledged its benefits in a "Spring hat or a pair of shoes."

She mentioned the fact that she was to preside at a house party over Decoration Day in the country.

"A gathering of poets?" I asked.

"No; just an ordinary crowd—stock brokerss, lawyers, and gentlemen," she said, humorously, intentionally exaggerating, that the contrast of what passes for the poetic might be all the stronger.

Poets are not necessarily apart from the world about them, and the magazine poet must be a poet to live.

THE MAN IN THE STREET

BISHOP W. N. McVICKAR of Rhode Island is a man of Titanic mold. Yet his every thought is kindly. When he steps it is with great care lest he crush a daisy under his weight. He will stop to let an ant pass before him. Bishop McVickar is that sort of a man. He loves the dumb creatures and has learned much of their lives. He would deny it from sheer modesty, but he is also a master at telling animal stories. Here is one:

"There was once a kindly female elephant, strolling through a wheat field. How she happened to blunder so cruelly I don't know, but in her wanderings she stepped on a female partridge. With deep grief the elephant saw what she had done and pitifully she looked at the little partridges running about looking for their mother.

"'Poor little orphans,' said the compassionate beast, 'I have made them orphans.' Then she gathered them all together with her trunk and having tea. It appe[illegible] their young, she carefully lay down upon the bereft brood to shelter them for the night. All of which goes to prove that a woman is not necessary at the head of an orphan asylum."

EQUAL suffrage," remarked Simeon Ford during the courses of a recent public dinner, "is pretty tolerable in theory, but in practice it reminds me of a friend who once came to me with a long face and a very despairing attitude. Of course it was my duty to offer him my sympathy and incidentally to inquire what was the matter.

"He confided—confessed that he and his wife had agreed to tell each other their faults—to be perfectly frank with each other in everything, as the ideal marriage state demands.

"'Well,' I asked him, 'your wife being a fair—fair-minded woman, you know, did the plan succeed or fail?'

"'Would you believe,' he replied, 'that she hasn't spoken to me for nearly a month?'"

DOWN in Mobile there is a darky, a carpenter by trade, who, according to Mr. John Sharp Williams, has a local reputation for quickness at repartee. It appe[illegible] name, was subpoenaed as a witness in a case tried in one of the justice courts in Mobile. Although the attorney who took Botts in hand for cross-examination was needlessly severe in his treatment of the colored carpenter, the latter exhibited admirable patience and self-control. The two got along fairly well till the witness was asked as to his occupation.

"I'se a carpenter, Sah," said Botts.

"What kind of a carpenter?" asked the attorney.

"Dey calls me a jack-leg carpenter, Sah."

"Jack-leg carpenter!" sharply reiterated the lawyer. "What is a jack-leg carpenter?"

"Well, Sah, a jack-leg carpenter is what we cullud folks calls a carpenter who ain't a fust-class carpenter."

"I fail to understand you," said the attorney, more sharply than before. "You'll have to be more exact. What are we to understand by a jack-leg carpenter?"

"Dat's plained better by sayin' dat de difference is jest about de same as between you and a fust-class lawyer," responded Botts with a broad grin.

BILLY CLARK of the Corporation Counsel's office has the reputation of scenting a good story a mile off. Some assert that he doesn't discover them, but makes them up as he goes along. This is his latest:

"Mary Ann Reilly and Patrick Reilly of County Cork were a devoted couple. Mary, dying, pledged her husband to have the following carved on her tombstone:

"Twenty-one years later Patrick, being himself about to die, ordered that the following addition be cut upon the stone:

"'Here is Patrick at last.'

"Pat's graceless son was not satisfied. He had long yearned for his inheritance. He had carved below the two previous inscriptions this:

"'Late, as usual.'"

EX-PRESIDENT GROVER CLEVELAND tells a sto[illegible]

lesson to the children in his class. He read impressively from the Bible:

"And the last state of that man was worse than the first." Then he asked:

"Can any little boy tell me what this means?"

Up popped a tiny lad in the rear seat, who piped forth:

"Please, Sir, the man moved to Jersey."

A VIRGINIAN whose home adjoined the early one of Thomas Nelson Page tells this story of the author's father. The family, like many other Southern ones, was much impoverished by the war, though the old-time hospitality was as warm as ever. One day guests were expected upon whom Mrs. Page wished to make a good impression, and the furniture and fittings were furbished for the occasion. The good dame's heart was much disturbed by the worn condition of the upholstery of a rare old [illegible] and she [illegible] her when receiving the visitors, and then to sit carefully over the ragged spot. With fine chivalry Mr. Page greeted the arrivals and discoursed entertainingly until the neighing of his favorite horse attracted his attention, as a stable boy led it past the window. Then rising, he said to the guests, "Will you excuse me for a short time?" and to his wife, "My dear, I really cannot act any longer as a patch for that sofa."

LLOYD OSBORNE, kinsman and collaborator of Robert Louis Stevenson, called on the cashier of a leading magazine the other day, after vainly writing several times for a check due him.

"I am sorry," explained the cashier, "but Col. So-and-So, who always signs our checks, is confined at home with the gout."

"But, my dear man," expostulated the author-collector, "does he sign them with his feet?"

JOHN THOMPSON (one of the famous Thompson twins) tells about a party of ministers who, while passing through the South on their way to the morning they strolled into a little tumble-down church, occupied by the colored Baptists, and presided over by a very old and ignorant darky preacher. They almost rolled out of their pews when the old preacher began: "Bredern, de subjaict o' my disco'se dis mawnin' is foun' in de one-eyed chap of two-eyed John!"

POSTMASTER WILLCOX has many friends among the alumni of his old college, the University of Rochester. One of these is principal of a school not a hundred miles from New York, and at a recent reunion he told Mr. Willcox this tale. A teacher in a primary grade asked the children what country was at the antipodes. They all gave it up.

"Suppose I bore a hole right through the earth; where will I come out?" asked

SOCIETY AT HOME AND ABROAD

MEMORIAL DAY being celebrated on Tuesday gives to many of the financial institutions an extra holiday, and in consequence there will be much latitude for house parties in the suburbs and at the early Summer resorts. The first phase of the suburban season has passed with the final races for the Spring at Belmont Park. The coaching is also over, and the horses which day by day went to Ardsley and Belmont Park have been sold. The attendance at the sale on Thursday was fashionable, and quite a society event was made of it. With Belmont Park and Ardsley for the present out of the running, there remains but a month of "between the seasons" until Newport will open in all its glory, and Narragansett and Bar Harbor will again throb with life, and Southampton and the Long Island seaside towns will be in the whirl of their Summer activity. Society has left town.

Memorial Day is always the outpost of the Summer, and its yachting events are the avant courriers of sports and amusements in the open. Already the wayfarers from Europe are coming westward, and each ship brings quite a list of well-known people who have been in Paris, in London, on the Riviera and the Continent. Owing to the extreme coolness of the weather, there has been much lingering in New York, and the theatres have been well patronized and the restaurants are crowded in the evenings as well as at luncheon time. In fact, now with the advent of the motor car and the desire for suburban estates New York is never absolutely dull, even if there are no fashionable arrangements on the social calendar. The "little between seasons" is always most enjoyable. It is in the nature of an intermezzo.

Among the departures for Europe have been the Gerrys, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Seton, and Mr. and Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies. Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Dyer, Jr., and Miss Swan have been among the number returning. The yachts which have been cruising in the Mediterranean are homeward bound, some of them stopping a while in English ports en route for America. The Narada will be at Newport by the middle of June, and Mr. Walters and Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones and Miss Jones will be here shortly and then take up their residence at the Rhode Island Summer capital. Miss Jones is to make her début this Summer, and a ball will be given for her.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, who sailed last week, will be abroad until the middle of July.

Meadow Brook has been occupying itself with polo, and the games there have attracted a large attendance. They will be continued this week. Brookline has had its horse show, and among the visitors well known in New York have been Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, whose little daughter was christened at Newport before they left for Massachusetts; Mrs. Frederick Neilson, and Mr. and Mrs. William R. Hunter. This week will see Philadelphia's horse show, and there will be an excellent representation from New York present. Both Alfred and Reginald Vanderbilt have exhibits, and Mrs. Grosvenor and Mrs. Roche are also among those who are interested. Horse shows will follow in rapid succession, as will also the different polo contests. The first of the Summer exhibitions takes place at Monmouth Beach early in July. Another event of much interest to those in the suburbs will be the housewarming on June 3 at the farm of Ira Kip, Jr., near Orange, N. J. Nearly all the yachts are in commission, and preliminary cruises will be made before the regular sailing season. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer are entertaining on their yacht. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gould will be afloat this month, and Commodore and Mrs. Bourne will also entertain in June on their yacht.

Americans abroad are in the full tide of the London and Paris seasons. Mrs. John Jacob Astor has arrived in London and taken possession of her residence there. Ambassador and Mrs. Reid and Miss Reid are booked to sail this week, and former Ambassador and Mrs. Choate leave London on Tuesday, sailing for this country and passing the Summer at their country seat at Stockbridge. James J. Van Alen also comes over for a short period. Mr. and Mrs. Phipps and Miss Phipps are also sailing, and the marriage of the Hon. Mr. Frederick Guest to Miss Amy Phipps takes place in June in London. The reception will be given at the residence of the bride's parents in that city. Mrs. Goelet has arrived in England. Mrs. Ogden Goelet was on the Continent last week, but the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe have settled in London for the season. Mrs. Astor will not change her plans this year. She will be at Newport in July.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry White and Miss White have been in Rome about a month, and the new Ambassador has been widely entertained. The Roman season has been quite on retard. It is usual for it to end shortly after Easter, but Europe is experiencing the same cool weather as is enjoyed in America. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Iddings, who are soon to go to Egypt, were among those who entertained Ambassador and Mrs. White. Mr. Iddings was First Secretary of the American Embassy. He is succeeded by Mr. Hitt, whose wife was Miss Grey of Newport. Mrs. Ogden Mills, the Misses Mills, Miss Cavendish Bentinck, and Miss Evelyn Burden have been among the Americans in Rome this season.

The last week of May was eventful for its weddings, rather rare occurrences in this month. The June weddings are many, and Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday of this coming week will see a number of happy couples united.

The marriage of Miss Georgiana Wilmerding, the only daughter of Mrs. John Wilmerding, and Ansel Phelps will take place on Wednesday at the home of the bride's cousin, Mrs. John Magee Elsworth. Mrs. Elsworth was a Miss Van Rensselaer. Miss Wilmerding will not have any bridesmaids. The best man will be Stowe Phelps, brother of the bridegroom, and the ushers Coster Wilmerding, Ezra Lincoln, Frederick O. Spedden, and Howard Sherwood. The guests will be limited to relatives and intimate friends, owing to the recent death of the bride's father. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps will pass the Summer abroad, and will return to New York in the Autumn. Miss Wilmerding is a niece of John G. Heckscher and a first cousin consequently of Mrs. George B. McClellan and Mrs. Egerton Winthrop, Jr. Another cousin, Stephen Van Rensselaer, has just announced his engagement to Miss Marion Farlin of Elizabeth.

At St. Bartholomew's Church Miss Eva Lawrence, the daughter of Frank Lawrence, President of the Lotos Club, will be married to David H. Taylor. The ceremony will be an imposing one. It will be performed by Bishop Greer, assisted by the rector of the church, the Rev. Leighton Parks, and will be witnessed by a large number of relatives and friends. The bridesmaids will be Miss Eulalie Matthews, Miss Gertrude Easton, Mabel Lefferts Jones, Adelaide N. Hageman, Frances P. Bingham, Isobel Cary, Dorothy Corbiere, and Janet Blackwell. The best man is Mr. William Taylor, the brother of the bridegroom, and the ushers are the Messrs. E. Raymonde Bossange, Joseph S. Stout, Herbert E. Lawrence, Arthur I. Taylor, Louis G. Smith, Connor Lawrence, J. Augustus Barnard, and Edward R. Otheman. The bridesmaids will wear gowns of white and blue and white hats trimmed with blue tulle. A reception will follow the ceremony at the residence of the bride's father, 534 Madison Avenue.

At Meriden, Conn., Thursday, will take place the wedding of Miss Mary Alice Unkles, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Unkles, and Harrie Victor Schieren, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Schieren. A number of friends will go on for the ceremony and reception.

Saturday will be a favorite date with June brides. One of the largest weddings of the season will be that of Miss Helen White Stevens, daughter of Mrs. Berkley Mostyn, and Gilliat Ghequiere Schroeder. It will take place at St. Mark's in the Bouwerie, which has been the worshipping place for the bride's family ever since it was built. The bride is one of the descendants of Peter Stuyvesant, and is a near relative of the Chanlers, Rutherfurds, and other representative New York families. The church ceremony will be followed by a reception at the residence of the bride's mother. The bride's younger sister will be her maid of honor. Mr. Schroeder has a long list of ushers. The Schroeders were among the Summer residents of Newport generations ago, when that city was much more exclusive than it is to-day. One branch of the family lived in Mobile for years, and they are related to many of the old Southern families. Miss Stevens's grandfather, the late Dr. Octavius White, came from Charleston, S. C., where his ancestors were among the most prominent people in that aristocratic city. He was a man of great scientific attainments, and had a worldwide reputation.

There will be a large contingent of society going to Ridgefield, Conn., next Saturday for the wedding of Miss Winona King, daughter of Mrs. J. Howard King, to Oliver Perin of Baltimore. It will take place at the Congregational Church in that village. Miss Irene King, whose engagement to Francis C. Carley, brother of Mrs. Oliver Harriman, was recently announced, will be maid of honor. Miss Katheryn Norton of Albany will be one of the bridesmaids. The best man will be Lawrence Perin, a brother of the bridegroom, and the ushers Percy R. Pyne second, Nate McKay, William Hitt, Nelson Perin, Francis Carley, and Eben Byers. Bishop McVickar of Rhode Island will perform the ceremony, and the bride's brother-in-law, Edward Summersville J. McVickar, will give her away.

Another out-of-town wedding of interest on Saturday will be that of Miss Mary Russell, the daughter of James B. Russell of Winchester, Va., to Gardner W. Brown, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon H. Brown of this city. It will take place at the Landon Street Presbyterian Church in Winchester.

At Fairfield, Conn., Miss Marie Rogers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Brown Rogers, will be married to Thomas Sovereign Gates.

Miss Katherine Robinson Curtis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Curtis of Summit, N. J., will be married to Henry Hill Pierce of this city to-morrow afternoon. Phoenix Ingraham will be best man, and among the ushers will be Scott McLanahan, J. P. Cotton, Jr., Mortimer Denison, Thomas L. Pierce, and Charles Eastman of Portland, Me.

June 1 will also see a Roosevelt wed[ding]. Miss Elfrida Roosevelt of [illegible] ton is to be married to Orme Clark of England on that date. Miss Roosevelt is a daughter of Mrs. T. J. Bowlker and a cousin of the New York Roosevelts.

The announcement in THE TIMES last Sunday of the engagement of Mrs. Flora Bigelow Dodge to the Hon. Lionel Guest was not a surprise, as this event has been rumored for some time. However, Mrs. Dodge has always denied it, and has added the proviso that when she was ready for an announcement she would make it. The match is a brilliant one. Mrs. Bigelow Dodge is an exceptionally clever and beautiful woman. She is the youngest daughter of the venerable John Bigelow, at one time Minister to France. She was married to her first husband, from whom she has been divorced, at an early age after one Winter in New York society, where she was the toast of the season. Those who remember her brilliant mother, about whom there was always a mass of anecdote, as she was one of the most democratic as well as original of women, will recognise many of her most admirable traits in her daughter. The late Emperor Frederick and his wife, who was the Princess Royal of England, were sincere admirers of Mrs. Bigelow, and at the review at Windsor on the occasion of the first jubilee the then Crown Prince, perceiving Mrs. Bigelow on the reviewing stand, quietly dismounted from his horse and went up and shook hands with her, to the great astonishment of the assemblage of royalties and the audience generally.

John Bigelow, father of Mrs. Dodge, recently sailed for Europe with his eldest daughter, Miss Grace Bigelow. For nearly threescore and ten years Mr. Bigelow has been constantly engaged in literary work, quite independent of his diplomatic career and his place as a statesman and a jurist. A recent work from his pen shows the vigor of his mind. Mrs. Dodge was one of four sisters. One married the late Mr. Harding of Philadelphia, son of the patent lawyer, and another the late Charles Tracy, a relative of Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan. Poultney Bigelow, the writer, is her brother.

The Hon. Lionel Guest is the fourth son of Lord Wimborne. His mother was a daughter of the seventh Duke of Marlborough, and he is consequently a near relative of the present Duke. It is his brother, the Hon. Frederick Guest, who marries Miss Phipps next month.

Another engagement of an international character and of much interest is that of Miss Beatrice Winans to the Prince de Bearn, who was attached to the French diplomatic service in Washington last Winter. The Winans family has lived abroad for many years. It comes from Baltimore, and the old Winans mansion, Alexandrofsky, was occupied last year for the first time in a decade by the [illegible]

Winanses made a large fortune in Russian railroad securities, and have a town house in London and a country seat.

Newport is filling up rapidly. It is nonsense to predict anything like a June season. That month and the late Autumn, after the crowds have left, are considered by those who know their Newport to be the most enjoyable. Among the June occupants of cottages or villas will be Mr. and Mrs. Whitney Warren, who have not been at Newport for two seasons; Mr. and Mrs. George L. Rives and Miss Rives, Mrs. Work Roche and Miss Roche, the Reginald Vanderbilts—out at their farm—and later the Alfred Vanderbilts; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Webster, Mr. and Mrs. R. Livingston Beeckman, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Lorillard, Mrs. Clermont Best and Miss Best, Miss Anna Sands, Mr. and Mrs. George Peabody Wetmore and Miss Wetmore, Mrs. William Rockler and Mrs. J. Todhunter Thompson. Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, Mrs. Vanderbilt and Miss Vanderbilt, who have just sailed for Europe; Mr. and Mrs. James A. Burden, Jr., Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Wysong, Lispenard Stewart, P. F. Collier, and others, including Mrs. Astor, will regularly settle at Newport in July. Mr. and Mrs. H. A. C. Taylor are still abroad. Mrs. Charles Hall is nominally a resident of Newport, but will not go there permanently before the middle of June.

Mrs. Abram Hewitt and the Misses Hewitt sailed on the Baltic for Europe. They will be absent all Summer. Dr. H. Barton Jacobs and Mrs. Jacobs of Baltimore were on the same ship. They are to return for a part of the Newport season. Mr. and Mrs. William E. Shepherd and Mrs. James Brown Lord went also on the Baltic.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert J. Collier sailed on the Deutschland, and Mrs. P. F. Collier went with them. There were a number of foreign people of title and native and other dignitaries on the same vessel. J. Henry Smith and Mrs. Claus A. Spreckels and Miss Spreckels were on the passenger list. The Count and Countess de Dombasle, who were married on Wednesday, sailed on the French ship. Others who are to go this week include Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Butler Preston, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Twyeford Peters, and Mrs. W. Storrs Wells.

The Gerrys, Harrimans, Loews, and Vanderbilts have become a little set to themselves, and the coaching trips of the Venture, which ended on Wednesday, were almost entirely devoted to them. Matchmakers are immediately arranging marriages between the young people, and perhaps it is a natural conclusion. Whichever prophet makes a correct guess, the arrangement will be satisfactory, as all of the young women and bachelors of this particular set represent families which would benefit by alliances of their descendants. It is stated that Robert L. Gerry would [illegible] not accompany his parents and sisters abroad, finding the neighborhood of Tuxedo Park and Goshen very attractive just at present. There is no doubt that E. Victor Loew will cross the ocean shortly. It is unlikely when young people ride, drive, dine, and dance through a season or more that Cupid will keep off his arrows, and society is only waiting for authoritative announcements.

Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, Jr., has sailed for London. She will be the guest of her parents, the Earl and Countess of Dysart. Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Post were passengers on the same ship. Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Beresford sailed last week. Mrs. Beresford was Miss Emily Iselin. The Beresfords have a place in Ireland where they pass a great part of the Summer.

On June 8 Mrs. J. Hood Wright will hold a charity festival at her country seat on the King's Bridge Road in aid of the J. Hood Wright Hospital. This will be the last large charity entertainment until next Autumn anywhere near town.

On Thursday Henry Gelshenen and Miss Florence Carpenter, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Whitney Carpenter, will be married. Mr. Gelshenen is one of several brothers. His mother is the widow of a wealthy contractor and has a beautiful residence in Fifth Avenue. Charles W. Morse was one of the executors of his father's estate. Miss Lillian Carpenter is to be maid of honor, and the bridesmaids will be the Misses Adele and Beatrice Carpenter, the Misses Madeleine and Corinne Gelshenen, Miss Kate De Forest Prentice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William S. O. Prentice, and the Misses Louise and Mabel Freeman, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Freeman of Ridgewood Hall, Morristown. George W. Carpenter will be best man, and the ushers Paulding Fosdick, second son of Mrs. Charles Childs; C. Whitney Carpenter, Elisha Buck, C. N. M. Mackay, G. H. Nevin, Hal Phipps, and C. D. Raffety.

The Suburban will be run on June 15, and the second week in June will also see the exhibition of the Ladies' Kennel Club at Hempstead. These two events, of course, are not allied, but they are both important dates in the Long Island calendar. Few of the houses near the Meadow Brook centre have been closed, and there are many entertainments in prospect for the month of June. The Great Neck colony, especially, will have a series of sports in the open, including polo on private grounds, steeplechases at the different private race courses, and other entertainments. The Oyster Bay season is supposed to begin with the advent of the President's family. Miss Roosevelt, who spends only a short time each year at the paternal country seat, will visit Cleveland the second week in [illegible] the rest of the year. The Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club will have an "opening" on Memorial Day, and during the Summer dances will be given there each fortnight. It will be a resting and anchorage point for the various yachts and fleets which cruise in the Sound in Summer.

Miss Sara Means, niece of Mrs. James D. Layng, and Vivian Spencer will be married on Saturday at Mount Kisco. Miss Thompson will be maid of honor, Henry D. Spencer will be best man, and the ushers will include Henry Talmadge, second, James D. Layng, Jr., George J. Byer, and Charles H. Welles.

Other weddings in the month of June will be those of Miss Rosamund Curtis Low, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Gilman Low, to the Rev. John Henry Chapman at Grace Church on the Heights, Brooklyn, on Monday; of Miss Louise E. Hollins, daughter of William E. Hollins, to Henry Chauncey Cryder at St. James's Church on June 6; Miss Helen Barber, daughter of Mrs. Charles G. Barber, to Elbert F. Wilmerding at the residence of the bride on June 7; Miss Janet Stewart Heath, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kemble Heath, to Robert Forsyth Little at the West End Collegiate Church on the same day; Miss Marie J. C. Delmonico to Edward Frith Du Vivier at St. Ann's in this city, and Miss Margaret Robison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Robison, to Samuel A. Walsh, Jr., at Massepequa, L. I., on the same day, and on June 2, in Philadelphia, that of Homer Saint-Gaudens to Miss Carlotta Dolley, the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles S. Dolley.

Among the engagements announced are those of Miss Elisabeth De Votion, daughter of Mrs. John De Votion, to John A. Sherer of Brooklyn; Miss Kathryn Whiting, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eliot Butler Whiting, to Arthur Ebbs Wilauer, and that of F. Kingsbury Curtis of this city to Miss MacLanahan of Washington.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

MISS BEATRIX JONES has written an article on Le Nôtre, the famous French landscape gardener of the time of Louis XVI., for the July issue of Scribner's. Miss Jones is one of the few women landscape gardeners of the day, a young woman who made her début less than a half dozen years ago, and who comes of one of the oldest familes of Philadelphia and New York. Miss Jones is a daughter of Mrs. Cadwalader Jones of West Eleventh Street, who was Miss Mary C. Rawle of Philadelphia, and a relative of the old Cadwalader family. She married Frederick R. Jones, and a few years since, the marriage proving an unhappy one, divorced him. Mrs. Jones has long been prominent in older New York society, and with several other women started a dozen or so years ago the class of smart subscription dances named the Cinderellas, a class still existing under the management of Mrs. John S. Barnes. Miss Jones early betrayed a taste for other than society pursuits, and persuaded her mother to allow her to take up landscape gardening as a study, and later as an avocation. She became duly qualified to practice her profession, and has laid out several fine gardens, notably at Bar Harbor. With her mother, Miss Jones has traveled extensively in Europe and studied landscape gardening there, and a year or so ago devoted almost an entire Summer to Le Nôtre's work, which includes the gardens of Versailles, the Tuileries, and St. Cloud, so that she is well qualified to write on the subject. For several years she has spent the Summer months abroad perfecting her knowledge. One of these trips several years ago was not devoid of romance, for she met and became engaged to a Mr. Mahaffy, son of John Pentland Mahaffy of Trinity College, Dublin, a distinguished scholar and author, although later they broke it off. Mrs. Jones is prominent in the New York literary set, and her Sunday dinners are quite famous for the lions thereat. Among the notabilities usually at her table when in New York are Marion Crawford and John La Farge, while Henry James has also been a guest thereat. Among the literary and artistic set in which the Joneses move are Mrs. Edith Wharton, who is a relative of Mrs. Jones; Mrs. Winthrop Chanler, and others.

Walter Townley, who has been promoted to be Councillor at Washington, and whose former official home was Constantinople, is one of the Townleys of Fulbourn, Cambridgeshire, England, a younger branch of the Townleys of Townsley—note the elision of one e in the name of the younger branch. His wife, Lady Susan Townley, is a sister of Lord Albemarle. Just before she left Constantinople she was decorated with the Grand Cordon of the Order of Chefakat by the Sultan. The house occupied in that city by the Townleys was burned to the ground a short time before their intended departure therefrom.

Mrs. Flora Bigelow Dodge, whose engagement to the Hon. Lionel George William Guest, fourth son of Lord Wimborne, and brother of the Hon. Frederick Guest, whose engagement to Miss Amy Phipps was announced in this paper in April, has always been regarded as one of New York's notably handsome women. Mrs. Dodge has spent much time abroad. Her father, the Hon. John Bigelow, was at one time our Minister to France. Some sixteen or more years ago she married Charles Stuart Dodge, by whom she has two children, a girl, Lucy Bigelow Dodge, about fourteen, and a son about ten. The marriage, however, did not turn out happily, and some two years ago Mrs. Dodge settled in South Dakota and procured a divorce. In the meantime the marriage of her brother, Poultney Bigelow, to Miss Edith Jaffray had not turned out happily either, and Mrs. Bigelow had sought and procured a divorce. Last Winter Mrs. Bigelow and her three daughters spent the Winter here, and Miss Mildred Dodge remained with a relative, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, when her mother and [illegible]

Falls, where she has lived almost continuously for several years. At the time she procured her divorce it was rumored that she would marry Lionel Guest, whose attentions were marked, but it was not until ten days ago that Mrs. Dodge announced her engagement. Mr. Guest is immensely wealthy, and only twenty-five years of age. Mrs. Dodge is the mother of a daughter now about fifteen years of age. Mrs. Dodge is like her father, clever with her pen, and wrote one strikingly clever novelette for a well-known fashionable monthly. She has much originality in dress. Her gowning is usually characterized by the greatest simplicity of both material and cut, and the writer remembers a charming frock of dotted muslin of the simplest possible cut and which might have been duplicated provided one were clever with the needle for $10, and in which she was a picture. She has for years been an intimate friend of the Countess of Suffolk, formerly Miss Daisy Leiter. When the Earl of Suffolk came over a few months ago to marry Miss Leiter, the Hon. Lionel Guest came with him, and was his best man at the ceremony. Mrs. Dodge's intimacy with the Leiters led also to the report that Joseph Leiter was her ardent suitor.

In appearance Mrs. Dodge is a very handsome and unusually noticeable woman. She is not very tall, although a little over medium height, but she is large and Juno like without being stout, her broad shoulders, splendid torso, and well poised head with its dark coloring and slightly aquiline nose and her cordial and unaffected manners are all marked features.

One of her gowns, a light heliotrope, embroidered in violets and topped by a simple hat, violet trimmed, formed the subject last Winter of a spectacular description, than which nothing could have been further from the mark.

The late Frederic J. de Peyster was one of the few men of wealth who understood the art of leisure; he did not devote himself to the end of his life of sixty-six years to the amassing of more and more money, but satisfied with a handsome fortune he retired at forty from active law practice and devoted himself to educational and charitable work, to the management of his property and the enjoyment of home life. He was a clubable man, and all of his associates were fond of him, for he was always ready with a mirthful word or a cheery quip, and had a marvelous control of his temper. He was a member of the Century, University, and Down-Town Clubs, and a leading spirit in the University Dining Club. Among the many misstatements in his obituaries was one to the effect that he had been knighted by the Queen of Belgium. As a matter of fact, in 1893 he was knighted by the Queen of Holland and received the cross of "Orange—Nassau" as an indication of gratitude for the hospitality shown the Dutch frigate Van Speyk when participating in the Columbian celebration in American waters. Another of the biographical inaccuracies was the statement that he was born in Morrisania. His birthplace was in Amity Street, near Broadway, just south of Washington Square.

He came of fighting stock. He was the son of James Ferguson de Peyster, who was a Captain of the regulars in the war of 1812 at the age of eighteen, and his mother had been Miss Frances Goodhue Ashton of Salem, Mass. He was named Frederic after his grandfather, who was a stanch Tory and was at seventeen a Captain in the British Army, fighting under Cornwallis in the Revolution. He took the initial J. to distinguish himself from a cousin of the same name. Mr. de Peyster was graduated from the Columbia Law School, receiving the degree of LL.M. After traveling extensively in Europe he practiced law in New York, and in 1871 married Miss Augusta McEvers Morris, elder daughter of William H. Morris of Morrisania. He founded the American School of Classical Studies in Greece, and for thirteen years was its Treasurer. He was one of the founders also of the Archaeological Institute of America and President of the New York Branch, and was an active member of the New York Historical, American Geographical and Numismatic Societies and a Fellow of the National Academy of Design. In later years he was much interested in the St. Nicholas Society, of which he was several times President, and in the Society of Colonial Wars. He was Governor General of the General Society of Colonial Wars, and the week previous to his death had been re-elected for three more years. His funeral in old Trinity, on lower Broadway, was one of the most largely attended in years; the church was filled, and his remains were laid at rest in the old family vault that has belonged to the de Peysters for nearly 200 years. His pallbearers were a notable lot of well-known New Yorkers, and were Elbridge T. Gerry Adrian Iselin, Jr., Robert Stuyvesant, Gerard and J. W. Beekman, Seth Low, W. Emlen Roosevelt, F. de Peyster Foster, Dr. Beverly Robinson, John M. Bowers, Howland Pell, Austen G. Fox, Henry Swords, George Gordon King, and Philip Rhinelander. Edward de Peyster Livingston was, with his widow, named in his will as executor of his estate. This estate was divided into eight parts, five of which went to his five children, Frederic Ashton de Peyster, Helen Van Courtlandt de Peyster, Frances Goodhue de Peyster, Augusta Morris de Peyster, and Ella Morris de Peyster, and three parts to his widow, Mrs. Augusta Morris de Peyster.

The Duke of Bedford, King Edward, Lady Derby, Lady de Grey, Lily Duchess of Marlborough, Alfred Rothschild, Sir Alfred Harmsworth, Mrs. McEwan, Mr. Rubé, Sir Basil Montgomery, and Mrs. Bradley Martin, Sr., are the few who have boxes at Covent Garden for the opera every night of the season. The first named is the ground landlord of Covent Garden. South Africa is represented in the boxes by the Messrs. Rubé, Beit, Werner, Neumann, and H. J. King; the Scotch by the McEwans, the Americans by Mrs. John W. Mackay and Mrs. Martin, and the world of finance by the names of Arthur Sassoon and Leopold and Alfred Rothschild. One of the rules of etiquette governing English opera boxholders is that the women must remain as though fixed to their chairs; a stroll in the corridor is impossible, and so is visiting between the boxes. No refreshments are permitted except on a Wagner night, when a light dinner is sometimes served. The Duke of Bedford's box has a sitting room attached, where dinner is served, and there is also a private stairway and exit to a side street. Certain evenings are dubbed tiara nights by our English cousins, for then the wearers of these atrocities appear in all the glitter of their jeweled crowns. The more artistic women wear garlands of flowers. Mondays and Thursdays are the smart evenings; here Mondays and Fridays bring out the more fashionable crowds. Now that the King has declared against Saturdays and Sundays out of town, the Saturday night performances at Covent Garden are gaining much socially in brilliancy.

Mrs. Lewis Vernon Harcourt of England is being congratulated on the birth of a daughter. Mrs. Harcourt was a New York girl, Miss Mary Ethel Burns, daughter of the late Walter Burns, and her marriage to "Lulu" Harcourt was celebrated six years ago. The Harcourts have a beautiful home, Nuneham, with a fine park and extensively wooded grounds, in which are miles of winding walks. Mrs. Harcourt is tall, dark, and vivacious, and is devoted to music. Mr. Harcourt is noted for his smart uressing and is a great favorite in society.

The Duchess of Portland, famous for her romantic marriage, her Malmaison pinks, and her collars, has arrived in London. She married the Duke sixteen years ago, and in that time has earned the sobriquet of the "Good Duchess." She induced her husband to turn his winnings on the turf over to charitable works, and she has eschewed the so-called "smart set." She is not athletic, although a good swimmer. Among her small circle of intimate friends are Lady Granby, Mrs. Craigie, the authoress, and Mrs. Beerbohm Tree.

THE SOCIAL WHIRL.

MRS. SEARLES BABBITT, 14 West Seventy-fifth Street, gave a small bridge party and luncheon on Friday, at her country home in Allenhurst, N. J., to a number of her New York friends. PERPETUAL LEAP YEAR AT WEST POINT.

IF ANY fair young damsel with ambitions goes to West Point and expects to have perpendicular rows of brass buttons following her around, it's because she's never been there before. The way the female visitors—"femmes," the cadets call them—attack and literally take by storm the hearts of the West Pointers would bring deep blushes to the cheek of those demure creatures who are used to staying at home and having the "young gentlemen" call on them.

The conditions are partly responsible—indeed, it would be kinder to the "femmes" to say the conditions are wholly responsible. For, unless one of the soldier boys is summoned forth from barracks by a visitor, he can't leave. But when his sweetheart—if it has reached that stage—sends in for him he may emerge and take a stroll on Flirtation Walk.

And so it is a regular practice now for the girls to walk boldly into the quadrangle formed by the gloomy barracks, enter the guardhouse confidently, and direct the Officer of the Day to send in for Cadet Jones or Cadet Smith. The young girl who goes up for her first trip and learns the West Point way of doing things looks at it with horror. She vows she will never be so unmaidenly. But after she has sat in her room either in the West Point Hotel or at some officer's house alone for three or four days she changes her mind.

In every way the love affairs are the reverse to the love affairs of the outside world. Any day a woman will carry in a five-pound box of candy, call for her favorite cadet, and deliver it into his hands. It is a perfectly natural thing to do—at West Point. It happens so often that the cadets pay no attention to it and are rather surprised that any comment should be made on such a trivial and commonplace performance. The same girl who brings a box of candy to the army lad would probably die before she would make a similar presentation to her civilian lover in New York, or Kansas City, or New Orleans, or wherever she may hail from.

A woman's inordinate fondness for brass buttons and shiny uniforms does not cease to be amusing and interesting because it is so old and well-known a fact. It's like a journey to the world of upside-down to walk about the grounds at West Point and see the "femmes" trying to wheedle the cadets into some show of affection. Where there are 500 or more youths at one place, all of them at the age at which petticoats have the greatest charm, one would think the swish of a skirt would bring thrills of unaccustomed joy.

But it is not so. There are always more than enough women to go around—as is true also of Annapolis, where the navy lads disport themselves in uniforms just as gay. From every part of the country they come, from far California, from near by Brooklyn, from Jersey, and South Carolina, and Arkansas, and Massachusetts—from everywhere. The United States Army Academy seems to be a sort of woman-magnet. It has been said that the best thing a fortune hunter could do would be to get an appointment to West Point, go there, sit down—and wait for his fortune in petticoats to come and claim him. Never a year passes but three or four embryo Lieutenants marry rich before the ink on their commissions is dry.

Especially are the women thick at the big football and baseball games, though there are enough of them all the time. There is a hop every Saturday night, and that's enough to draw them by the hundreds. On one occasion a girl who had never been to the Point went up three or four days before a hop. She knew several cadets, but she wasn't up on West Point etiquette. So she sat and waited for her uniformed friends to come to see her. They didn't come. Another woman, an old-timer, saw her on the hotel veranda, noticed her downcast expression, and accosted her.

"Excuse me," said the old-timer, "but I see you don't know the frills up here, so I'll tell you one or two. Never wait for a cadet, for if you do you'll never see him. Forgot you're a woman and he's a man, strut into the guard house, and make 'em bring him out. It may be queer at first, but you'll get used to it."

And the new one got used to it. It was not hard—in fact, after the first scare the women rather like it. It gives them a grip they might never get otherwise. The cadet who is "sent in" for considers it a point of honor to go out—he can't send back a cool "not at home."

"Two things we have plenty of," remarked a cadet to a male visitor not long ago, "work and women."

WAITRESS VACATIONS.

WAITRESS vacations are features in the life of the working girls of New York, and the season of preparation is just beginning. The girls who take these vacations are those who are employed in shops of dressmaking establishments, largely the latter, during the colder months of the year, and in the Summer, during the hotel season, they are sent off to different resorts to wait on table, breathe good fresh air, get plenty to eat, roses in their cheeks, and a stock of health for the Winter, though they have plenty of hard work to do.

This is one instance where the working girl does not take exception to house work. She does not look upon waiting in that light. College girls who have eked out scanty incomes by this same work have thrown a glamour over it, and the girls from New York, where caste lines in labor are strongly marked, like the change and look upon their Summer outing as a delightful kind of Bohemianism.

They get from $12 to $14 a month, in addition to tips, and the employer pays the fare from New York, or, if not, the return fare will be at reduced rates, and the girls come home with a nice little nest egg of money in their pockets. One of the advantages of the work, it is claimed, and housewives might consider this, is that the girls work for men employers as a rule, a fact which they find very satisfactory. They go to the Summer hotels and have nothing to do with which men have the direct control, and there is seldom friction of any kind.

To prepare for the work the girls take a course of five evening lessons in waiting and chamber work before they leave the city. These are given at the Alliance Employment Bureau, 234 West Twenty-sixth Street, at a cost of five cents a lesson, or 25 cents for the course of five. With this the girls have a set of typewritten sheets given them, containing a synopsis of the lessons, to which they can refer at any time. The alliance is affiliated with the New York Associations of Working Girls' Societies as well as most of the Settlements and other philanthropic associations of the city, and through these the girls come who take the positions. The girls express a desire to go and the alliance does the rest.

It is in touch with hotels in different parts of the country and makes all the arrangements. One of the things about which care is taken is not to send the girls to hotels so near the big cities that they get a temporary floating masculine population drifting in and out over Sundays. They prefer the quieter places in the Catskills and other mountain resorts, and they have sent even as far as the Blue Mountains. They make sure, too, that the places are in every way desirable for the girls. There is only one thing that sometimes goes wrong, and which they cannot foretell, and that is the food supply. One establishment is to be blacklisted this year for that reason. There have been complaints from three lots of girls in three different years about it, and now they have concluded that the complaints were not without cause. Complaints are taken with a grain of salt, as a rule, for it could not be expected that from thirty to forty young women used to city life and its conveniences should take up country life and its different trials without more or less grumbling. Once in a while a girl comes back after she has started because the work is too hard. She is obliged to be on her feet for long hours, and not all of the girls are equal to it. But those who are flourish in the new life.

There are also opportunities which are not put down as attractions. Two of the girls sent out for these waitress vacations have married and now have homes of their own. One captivated a head waiter and lives in the city, and another won the heart of a politician. But the alliance is an employment, and not a matrimonial, bureau, and it does not make promises on these lines. It is glad to hear of as many girls as can be found who will take the positions, and can throw out its lines and get places for them.

NEW YORK SCHOOL GIRL WITH A SEA CAPTAIN'S LICENSE.

At once a cook and a Captain bold,
And the mate of the Nancy's brig,
And a bos'n tight and a midshipmite,
And the crew of the Captain's gig.
—BAB BALLADS.

IN her short yachting skirt, blue sweater, and natty sailor's cap, Amelia K. Jensen, who obtained a skipper's license last week from the New York Inspectors of Steam Vessels, looks a mere school girl. That is what she was until recently, when she took nominal command of the steamship Major Ulrich, after her father's illness made necessary his retirement from business. "Skipper Maude" is the name Miss Jensen is best known by among the old salts who surround the yachts stored in Hansen's Basin, South Brooklyn, where the girl Captain ties up at the close of her long day's work every evening alongside of John Jacob Astor's palace yacht Nourmahal. She is making her way toward the Narrows again each morning by 7 o'clock, except Sundays. In order to get her license Miss Jensen had to qualify as 21 years old, but no skipper around Hansen's Basin will believe it any more than they will believe that Capt. Jensen is a "he" simply because the license so specifies her.

Miss Jensen is the only woman sea Captain in New York Harbor and the first woman to receive a license in this port. She is young, sprightly, and good-looking. She was graduated from the Brooklyn High School, and then took a course in typewriting and stenography, with the idea of earning her own living. Whenever opportunity offered she went out with her father in the Major Ulrich, as he cruised around the harbor, selling water and ice to pleasure yachts and tramp steamers. Capt. Jensen was once in command of a clipper ship, and taught his daughter the principles of navigation. When he was taken ill Amelia decided to carry on his business, rather than look for a job as a stenographer. There was more money in it, and the work was more to her liking. She pored over books on navigation and studied the rules governing pilots in New York Harbor. Then she went to Capt. Seeley of the Steamboat Inspectors. He was not favorable to the proposition.

"You are too young," he said.

"I've been running the boat for some weeks, anyway, while father was sick," persisted the girl. "Go ahead with your questions."

Capt. Seeley did so. "You certainly know enough to sail a ship," he said, "but I can't give you a license except for inside Sandy Hook and as far as Fort Washington, toward the Sound."

"I have no desire to run beyond those points," said Miss Jensen. "The boat is not big enough."

She got her license and is doing the work. She employs no help but an engineer, who is loud in his praise of her nerve and ability as a navigator. Capt. Jensen is her own deckhand, cabin boy, and cook. When her boat is caught out after dark she hangs out the lights as required by law. She makes fast and casts off when supplying vessels. She can go up a rope ladder as well as a man.

"Do you mind if I light a pipe, Miss," said the engineer when he made his first voyage after the new license was obtained.

"Certainly not. A sailor needs his tobacco as much as he needs air. But don't you call me Miss again. I'm Cap'n Jensen."

TITLES IN THE ARMY.

THE recent discovery of the minstrel Hon. Arthur Reginald French, heir to the title and estate of Baron de Freyne of County Roscommon, Ireland, among Uncle Sam's raw recruits at Fort Slocum, is not an unusual experience among officers familiar with the recruiting service. Among the Germans, Swedes, and Norwegians, who have the credit of making the best soldiers, recruited to Fort Slocum, New York, Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, and the Columbus Barracks, Columbus, Ohio, are a number of young men who have authority to wear titles in the land of their birth. In the United States a foreign title is no bar to a man's enlistment.

The officer at Fort Slocum who gave this information to a reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES could not remember another instance of a titled Englishmen enlisting, but he knew of several Britishers of aristocratic birth who made for the recruiting office almost as soon as they arrived in New York.

"There is nothing discouraging in the life of a soldier to young men who may have been connected with the army in foreign lands, and who come to America for reasons of their own to begin all over again and forget things," said this officer. "Many of those who come here from continental countries would be required to serve in the army if they remained at home, any way, and they prefer to cross the water and enlist to better advantage. To the average workingman who comes through Ellis Island the pay of an American soldier seems almost princely. True, the wages are only $15 a month, but all the necessaries of living furnished gratis to an American soldier make his earnings equivalent to $30 a month.

"So long as a recruit meets the physical requirements of the service, and can speak and write English, he has no trouble in enlisting. His progress in the army depends entirely upon the same conditions that insure success elsewhere—that he shall do the work required of him and behave himself.

"By the time the soldier who enlisted at twenty-one and has served fifteen years out of the country is forty years old he is entitled to be retired. He gets a pension of $25 a month if he remains nothing but a common soldier from the time of his enlistment. But under the conditions of the service to-day a man who could not attain the rank of noncommissioned officer, such as a Hospital Sergeant, Quartermaster's Sergeant, or some place like that, would be so dull and stupid that it would be a question if he passed the first enlistment. If a soldier does earn a place on the non-commissioned staff his pension is $50 a month, instead of $25.

"There he is, then, at forty years of age, with a reasonable expectation of twenty years of life before him, with a permanent income of $50 a month, and about $5,000 in cash to start in business with. Nothing slow about that, is there?

"To men in the service it is no wonder at all that healthy, hearty young fellows with a love of travel and adventure, and a considerate regard for provision in their old age, should prefer the life of a soldier to that of a poorly paid artisan drudging through an uneventful life in the slums of some big city!

"We have to be careful in absorbing these ambitious young foreigners into our service. Some of them are undoubtedly spies. During the Spanish-American war we passed one likely young Prussian, whose fluency with English subsequently aroused our suspicion. While he was in barracks we discovered that he was an officer in the Prussian army. We said nothing to him. He was sent out for service, as he desired to be. But we spoiled his usefulness by sending him to Alaska, instead of to Cuba."

THE SYSTEM DIDN'T WORK.

SOME of the feats in remembering names and faces of persons only seen once performed by bank clerks and persons in similar positions are astonishing, but it is a fact that very few of them owe this faculty to any of the artificial systems of mnemonics so widely advertised. Either the gift is a natural one or is acquired at the expense of much hard work.

The cashier of a downtown bank who is noted for his memory for names and faces got talking the other day about his faculty and confessed that it had been acquired with much labor.

"When I was a young fellow," he said, "I was secretary to the President of a New Jersey bank, and I made up my mind that a good memory for names and faces would be a valuable asset, and set to work to supply what nature had not given me. I invested $50 in an elaborate system of mnemonics, and the first opportunity I had to use it was when my employer sent me to a hardware store on a personal errand.

"My system consisted in associating the man in my mind with some simple article connected with his trade and prefixing or suffixing a letter or more as necessary. For instance, Sanders the grocer would be associated in my mind with sand, and I would of course remember to add the three letters needed to form his name.

"Well, I framed up a plan on this system to remember the hardware man's name, and in two weeks I came back again. My system was working beautifully. I walked in as brisk as you please and hailed my friend.

"'How are you, Mr. Snails?' I said.

"Something in the man's face made me fear that there had been a slip somewhere. 'Are you not Mr. Snails?' I asked.

"'Young man,' he said, 'you are too blamed fresh. My name is Stacks.'"

Always Hearing About Life.

"A few years ago everybody referred to the 'strenuous life,'" growled the smoking-room pessimist, as he tapped his empty glass alongside of his empty glass and pushed it significantly at the barkeeper.

"Then came the 'simple life,' the talk of which made almost any kind of life not worth the living. This was soon followed by universal gabbing about that abbreviated period known as the 'Outdoor life.'

"And now, to make sure that we don't have anything to talk about, we've got the 'Squirrel Life.'"

GOWNS OF THE MOMENT

THE princess skirt with bolero or Eton coat is among the smartest of the short costumes, and in no other is perfection of fit so essential; in this particular skirt the least fault is exaggerated, and none but first-class tailors can turn out such costumes and have them a success. This alone will prevent the princess skirt from becoming common.

In Vienna there has originated the latest thing in skirts, a draped effect on the centre gore of the skirt directly below the waist line. In London this variation is meeting with great success.

The bell-shaped skirt, tight fitting over the hips, is the smartest for the short skirt; some are plaited and others are gored, or have invisible plaits, but the skin tight finish around the hips is essential.

In coats the Empire for outdoor wear and the Directoire or Louis coats as a part of the costume lead. In some of the new coat and skirt costumes for afternoon and evening wear the coat is plain instead of the skirt, and the skirt is striped or figured.

The redingote and long coat are being much worn during this very chilly Spring weather.

While Parisians prefer checked and plaided silks and voiles for short street costumes, the English women stick to serges and the lightweight cloths in plain colors, but light shades.

The draped bodices continue to be about the only bodice for costumes, and the effect of many such is a deep girdle pointed both above and below the waist line, with the bodice portion set on the top in more or less bouffant drapings, shirrings, or puffings. In nearly every one the fichu effect is retained.

There is to be great variety this Summer in gowns, and also in accessories, while as for hats, almost anything that suits one's tastes may be donned. The exaggerated French styles in chapeaus suit but few women, and even those few have looked more handsome under other chapeaus. A reigning beauty may wear almost anything and be beautiful still, where an ordinary looking woman or a plain one would be a freak.

Small trimming buttons are at present the dernier cri in trimmings, as are also fancy braids, and the latter will undoubtedly continue to be extremely fashionable for months to come; indeed, braid may be obtained in so many different grades, colorings, mixtures, and weights that no other trimming could possibly take its place.

Plaids are not only on the top wave now, but promise to continue to be for serviceable gowns of all sorts in both the lightest weight as well next Autumn.

The all-black hat, for some time relegated to the rear, is again making its appearance in smart shops, and will doubtless before long be again quite the thing with any costume. It has too many advantages and good points to be long dismissed from even fashionable favor.

Lingerie hats—in white, of course—will be much worn this Summer, and even in delicate colors to match costumes, but this last supposes the getting of the hat with the costume and as a part of it, or of having the gown material made up over a foundation frame.

Lingerie parasols accompany these hats, and many of these parasols match exactly in material and trimming the gowns and hats they are to be carried with.

One's handbag is distinctly smart only when it matches the gown or some color or shade in it, and bags either with or without handles or flat straps are equally smart; that is, the smartest women carry either.

While the sleeves of the separate blouses for wear with handsome coats and skirts have the sleeves, when made in this country, showing puffs above the elbows or at the shoulders, some of the imported blouses show drooping puffs just above narrow shaped cuffs, so that no one need fling away a handsome and expensive lingerie blouse because of last year's puffs above the hands.

Separate half sleeves in all sorts of patterns of mull and lace may now be obtained, and obnoxious puffs may be removed from blouses of last season and the new lower sleeves joined on with lace or beading.

The princess model in sheer lingerie fabrics is one of the latest modes. These gowns must be cleaned, of course, by professionals, but as most handsome lingerie gowns are so cleaned, anyway, this makes no material difference. Miss Daisy Pierson wore such a gown at a recent fashionable wedding. It was a blue and white organdie. These princess lingerie frocks are in one piece from the bust line to the knees, and are shirred to fit around the waist and hips and above; or tucks and shirrs may be combined, and from the knees down several ruffles, or a Spanish flounce, having deep tucks, is set on to form the bottom of the skirt. These princess gowns clear the ground.

Fine lawns are being used for frocks, hats, and parasols, all being trimmed with lace, and the parasols being lined with some soft silk.

In ribbons narrow velvets in both black and colors are much used, while for the shirred and bow-knot designs narrow, lustrous silk ribbons as well as the soft liberties are used. Ombré and Dresden, as well as chine and other varieties, are all smart.

Mrs. Harry Lehr, who has just returned from a trip abroad and the purchase of many frocks in Paris, was seen at Sherry's at the luncheon hour in a new frock of a deep prune or purplish material, with a girdle, vest, collar, and cuff effects in pale lavender, the whole topped by a small hat matching the color of the gown, and trimmed with large, dahlialike rosettes of the lighter shade. This small hat was set on top of her head, slanted down toward the eyes, and was turned up at the back and left side very sharply. At the right side some purplish wings slanted from the front up, and on the upturned left side were two large rosettes, one near the back, the other in the centre of the side brim. The skirt of the costume touched the floor all around. The material looked in the subdued light of the restaurant like a silky voile. There was a hip yoke effect, whether a plain yoke, to which the skirt was joined, or an effect produced by pressed-in plaits, was not easy to discover. This yoke was perhaps six inches deep, and from it the skirt fell in the [illegible] an inch and a quarter wide. At the sides near the back were noticed several little lengthwise strappings of the material caught with little self-colored buttons. These picket-pointed strappings were perhaps three inches long, and were set on lengthwise, half on the yoke and half on the skirt, as though the two were joined by them. Down over this prune-colored hip yoke extended a plain, pointed, tight girdle of light lavender cloth buttoned in the centre and forming a deep point in the front. The Eton jacket was short enough to show the lavender girdle, and swung out loose but plain from the figure, its only ornamentation being a band of braid, similar to that on the skirt, around all the edges. A border of lavender cloth was inserted as a finish to the neck and also down the fronts. These bands were each perhaps an inch and a half wide, and dark buttons closed it down the centre front. The sleeves were quite simple, full but not puffy at the tops, and widened to the elbows. They were finished above the wrists by braid and cloth to match the body.

Mrs. Francis Stevens on the same day and at the same place wore an odd short costume with a white lingerie blouse. The skirt was instep length and of fine black material, laid in plaits from belt to hem. Around the top the plaits were pressed and stitched in to lie flat to the figure, while below they flared. The cloth top consisted of a sleeveless, collarless section of the cloth, or rather two sections joined on the shoulders and with wide armholes. Around the armholes and across the top, which was slightly heart-shaped in both the back and the front, were bands of embroidery, or rather embroidery on the material in a design between wheels and roses in shape. The two sections—front and back—were just alike, and the bands of the embroidery outlining the armholes continued over the shoulders and held this bodice portion in place. The white under blouse was elaborate and had elbow sleeves with shirred sections. A small turban with ecru crown and black velvet wound around the box brim showed one of the new style clusters of feathers—between the coque and the aigrette in shape and size—in black and white. The white being over the black and the bunch being put on lengthwise from front to back.

Mrs. George Gould was in town the other day, and lunched at a smart Fifth Avenue restaurant in a brilliant rose-pink cloth gown, a round-length skirt, and a tight-fitting, skirted coat, topped by a rather small toque. The skirt of the costume was laid in groups of lengthwise side plaits, each plait quite wide, and all of them pressed in. Forming a pair of stairs at each side of the skirt from the side fronts up, several plaits to the back were crosswise bar effects, outlined with fine red cord below the knees and pressed in the rest of the way; the entire skirt was sheath-fitting. The tight coat had moderately full sleeves to below the elbows and rather deep cuffs of the cloth, trimmed with two-inch bands of fine plaitings of the cloth, with fine cord or braid of soutache width exactly matching the hue of the cloth, a quarter of an inch from the edge of the plaitings. The coat closed at one side of the front under a bretelle extension of the cloth, and in the centre were medallion effects in cloth and cord. The coat extended some six inches below the waist line, with the side seams slashed up to the waist line, and a similar opening in the centre front, each of the three openings showing a V-shaped section of the skirt. Over the shoulders midway between the neck and the sleeves were the bretelle-shaped applications of cloth. These were some three inches across and of side-plaited cloth, the plaits being very shallow and stitched down perhaps an eighth of an inch from their outer edges. Fine red cord covered these [illegible] and also traced a pa[illegible] of each bretelle. T[illegible] box sides of green, the lower half picked out in red as though currants were set in. At one side near the front was a spray of red feathers with a dash of red velvet at the base of the wing, which was set at the top of the brim, the wing slanting down flatly along the brim.

Aluminium is now being used in tinsel embroidery combined with applique trimmings in gray taffeta, and as aluminium does not tarnish and is very light in weight, it is invaluable. Flower designs still predominate in the applique designs, taffetas and the other soft and lustrous silks being used.

In color combinations there is now a tendency to combinations of several colors in the same applique, rather than two colors or several tones of the same color as heretofore. Just a touch of gold tinsel is seen on many of these, but only a touch, so that the result is never garish.

Bandings in fine cloth, linen, silk, velvet with embroidered designs in silk, and Parisian bandings are all much to the fore, especially the one-sided ones for vesting pieces, and handsome buttons come to match the latter.

In handbags the odd and bizarre effects are sought for, and a bag unlike any other is a desideratum. Calf is being much used for smart bags, but it would never be recognised as such owing to its various treatment and nom de plumes, such, for instance, as fishscale, oakleaf, Fiametta, also granite, tiger stripes, and granulated calf.

In colors for the coming Autumn royal blue is predicted as a leader abroad, while in this country the shade termed inauguration blue is to be a much-used color. Greens in myrtle, reseda, and other dark shades will be fashionable, while browns will fall behind their run of last year, while the dark shades of plum, purple, and kindred hues are being manufactured in quantities.

All these indications from manufacturers show which way the wind will blow, for whatever Fashion might wish to dictate she is obliged to use the fabrics in the market, and these are always manufactured at least six months ahead of their use, sometimes a year.

No one need fear to invest in a plaided or checked costume, even though it be desired to continue its use next Autumn, for manufacturers are now weaving and getting ready to weave plaids of all sorts for the coming Fall and Winter. Shadow plaids, checks, and also stripes are to be a feature of the Autumnal dress materials. These made their first appearance in mohairs, and since then they have been manufactured abroad in melrose, in satin prunella, and other goods.

Stripes are to be pushed this Autumn, and ought to find favor with the stout women at least.

Mrs. James Speyer, lunching at Sherry's one day, was in one of the gowns she purchased just before she returned in the Spring from abroad. It was a Princess skirt, topped by a fetching little short cape so cut as to hang in folds, and these folds fell so that over the arms they formed elbow sleeve effects. The material was a light gray and white checked cloth of light weight—the check being of the regular shepherd's plaid size. The skirt just touched the floor all around, or barely escaped it. It was glove-fitting around the waist and hips, and for some distance below the hip line, while it extended above the waist—as do all Princess skirts—some six inches and fitted the figure as closely above as below the waist line. A few inches below the hip line the skirt formed modified godet-shaped folds that widened steadily and gave great fullness at the bottom, where they stood out away from the feet and ankles. About the bottom of the skirt was a band of the cloth a little over two inches wide stitched on, and at intervals of say twenty inches the band formed picket points; a three-quarter-inch button in gray silk divided in four by pinhead strips of white was set on each point. This skirt closed invisibly, it was really impossible to tell where, but a panel front and a panel back were simulated from top to bottom by double rows of buttons matching those on the bottom band. These rows of buttons were perhaps six inches apart at the top and eight at the bottom, the space between them diminished to five inches at the waist line. The buttons themselves on each row were about four inches apart.

The top of the costume was of light gray messaline or chiffon taffeta, with a yoke and elbow sleeves of white lace. The gray silk puffed out softly above the girdle top in a full, gathered section, which covered the bust, and above this came the lace. The cape of the checked material was finished to match the skirt, but with a narrower band of the material, with picket points and buttons. It was just long enough in the back to come below the Princess top of the skirt, and over the arms to form elbow sleeves, while the side fronts each came down to a long point, finished with a tassel; these points fell away from the front, showing the silk and lace top, and ended a bit below the waist line on each side. The hat topping this costume was a cream-white straw, trimmed with blended shades in chous of soft ribbon in curious but beautiful blues. It was a small, almost round hat, with a flat top and deep bandeau, and the brim seemed to droop down all around. To give a rough idea of the shape, it was as though a teacup had been placed in a saucer, and then the whole inverted, with the top of the cup resting on the head. It sounds anything but pretty, but it was so trimmed, so slightly tilted to one side, that the result was one of the few really artistic as well as chic oddities of the season. Long white gloves to the elbow completed the toilet.

Mrs. Seymour Le Grand Cromwell, also lunching at Sherry's, wore a simple but effective little [illegible] of black and white checked voile.

[illegible] one, was [illegible] in for some distance down. A two-inch bias band of plain light-brown cloth formed the finish to the lower edge. The top had a two-inch band of brown cloth as a belt, and into it the checked material was plaited, the material being laid in narrow and scant unstitched box plaits at the shoulder seams in front, and in still narrower and scantier side plaits at the back. The top was cut out and left a deep V-shaped or oval opening in the front; this was finished by a bias band of the plain cloth, and showed the embroidered white underblouse or guimpe, which over it was. The sleeves were moderately full, plaited elbow sleeves, with bands of cloth, and showed white undersleeves below the elbows. Her hat was an irregularly shaped toque or turban of cream chip, trimmed in the front and at the left with a large cluster of full-blown roses in different colors—heliotrope, cream, and others. The hat fitted closely to the head, slanting down to follow the shape of the head, and was decidedly smart, despite the absence of tilting and knocked-in or upturned sections that are getting so common.

Mrs. Harry Benkard lunched at Sherry's the other day in a beautifully embroidered robe of deep-red cloth of fine material and very light weight. It was a princess effect, and only close scrutiny revealed the fact that the tight and rather mediaeval top, with its embroidered lower edge extending down over the sheath-fitting skirt was not one piece with it. The sleeves were short and wide; at the sides they ended a little below the elbow in block sections, the centre being cut out like a deep bathlement up to within three inches of the shoulder seams, and showing the full white undersleeves. The finest sort of embroidery exactly the same shade as the gown finished the edges of these sleeves, as it did of the bottom of the mediaeval waist. The neck was cut out square and showed a white stock and guimpe, and this opening was also heavily embroidered, two strips or bands of embroidery extended down the front on each side, and two more on each side of the back, where it closed; the band about the bottom extended its width over the tight skirt. This skirt swept out in a short trail, and bands of embroidery on the skirt met those on the bodice, extending up from the hem, or rather, from a similar band about the bottom of the skirt. All of this embroidery was done directly on the cloth in a fine pattern suggestive of coral, and all of it was three and a half or four inches wide. A large black hat flaring at the front and sides and trimmed with a knot and extension of red velvet and red plumes topped her blue-black hair.

Mrs. James W. Gerard dined one evening at a fashionable restaurant with Mrs. Francis B. Stevens. Her frock was a simple one of pale pink chiffon with a tucked bodice and skirt. The skirt was shirred for about three inches below the waist line, and some six or seven very deep tucks—varying from two to four inches—were scattered several inches apart between the deep hem and the waist, the top one being some fourteen inches from the waist. The bodice itself was full, and while the lower part of the body was defined by a tight and wide girdle, above this the chiffon was tucked around the body in tucks an inch and a quarter wide and an inch or so apart. There was a round yoke and stock of white lace. The elbow sleeves were tucked to match the bodice and formed double puffs, with white lace frills that dropped over the long white gloves. She wore a large white hat lifted at the right and trimmed with pink plumes.

Mrs. Stevens was in white silk crêpe. The bodice had a separate stock and overhanging yoke of white lace; the bodice itself was almost close fitting, but of shirred crêpe and lace. The lace yoke came out over the tops of the elbow length sleeves, forming sleeve caps, and the sleeves, rather close and flat, were of lace with ruffle edges. The skirt trailed in the back and was a decidedly clinging one, being shirred a little at the top. Between the shirred top and the hem the skirt was shirred three times in ruched shirrings, each group nearly an inch and a half wide, the space between the shirrings being perhaps nine inches. Some nine inches below the lowest row there were three [illegible] under[illegible]

Young girl's frock of white mulle, embroidered in openwork eyelet fashion. The skirt opens at the bottom in points over a deep Valenciennes flounce.

Young girl's costume of cream colored Rajah silk, braided with scarlet soutache in Greek key designs.

Matron's costume of white crepe, embroidered in black and topped by a black lace coat.

LINEN FROM THE GROUND UP.

THIS is a linen season for the girl and for two equally important persons in social life, her mamma and her grandmamma. One dresses as well as the other, the elder women wearing more festive frocks and frills, as a rule, than the younger ones, and they are all wearing linens from head to heels. This begins even with the underwear. The very daintiest things are made of handkerchief linen, and they are comparatively inexpensive. The linen is too much for the average purse, however, and for the woman who picks up pretty things in lingerie at the white sales, but it is delightfully sheer and comes from the laundry white and crisp and is the coolest material to be found. Next comes linen lawn, and this is largely used because, being linen, it does not grow yellow with use. That is the intimate use of linen which only the woman and her laundress know, but she is also wearing linen for public view more than ever before.

There were never as many of the pretty embroidered linen frocks to be found or at more reasonable prices. They come in all styles. A pretty one is the skirt of the heavy linen with a short jacket, plaited perhaps with elbow sleeves worn with a lingerie waist, or there is a waist and skirt of the same linen to be worn with made-up stock. Or, prettier than this, the heavier waist is worn with guimpe and lower sleeves of one of the thin, sheer materials with lace insertions. There are whole frocks of the handkerchief linens, embroidered, as well as of mulls and less expensive materials. The thin frock and the lingerie waist rank high among the pretty things of the season's wearing apparel.

With her linen frocks the girl wears for accessories a linen belt and linen stock if she has not one made on her waist. She will pay $2.50 for linen spats, white, blue, or lavender, to match the color of her suit, and which she will wear over her white canvas, suede, or buckskin shoes. For the heavy linen frocks the linen belt of this year is prettier than any ribbon could be. It has a trim tailored effect, which agrees with the style of the frocks. The belts come in all styles. They are shaped, many of them, wider at the back than the front, and one of all white will be charming with a round pearl buckle in front and a tall narrow pearl slide to hold the belt up in the back. With colored linen suits these pearl buckles are colored to agree, and are in green or blue. There is a plain gilt buckle at times, and again a heavy linen cord-covered buckle which is smart. The belts may or may not be embroidered, and sometimes the color is combined with the white. A dark brown or blue linen belt will have edges of white, and there will be a touch of the brown or blue on the [illegible] with it.

[illegible] in white [illegible] linen as well as the more fluffy lingerie hats, and the linen parasol which the girl in white carries with her linen frocks are dreams of beauty. They are embroidered in dots or all-over patterns, and cost as low as $2 or $3 in machine embroidery, and go up to any price in the handwork. A beautiful imported parasol in handkerchief linen with hand embroidery can be had for $18. Heavy linens are numerous in the embroidered white parasols, but there are also the thinner materials, which have inserts of lace which are charming. They are made of deep ruffles of fine embroidery, and some of the latest, and not the most attractive, have flowers in natural colors embroidered on the soft, white material. With these are the parasols for the girl who is more economical and wears blue and brown linens and carries parasols in solid colors or embroidered with the colors on white. This is to be a Summer of glory for linens and the laundress.

A DEAD ONE.

A PHILADELPHIA business man tells of a German of his acquaintance who keeps a large and prosperous clothing store in Allentown. It appears that this German had in his employ a man who shall be called Louis, whom the proprietor had during many years of service advanced from the position of errand boy to the proud eminence of head clerk. Now the head clerk, soon after his last promotion, got exaggerated ideas of his importance, and again asked for an increase of salary, which the good-natured German granted him. Again shortly thereafter the head clerk preferred still another claim for an advance of salary, whereupon the German began to do a bit of thinking.

"Louis," said he, after a pause, "I bays you bretty vell already, ain't id? Vy should I bay you some more, eh?"

"It seems to me," replied Louis, very confidently, "that I am your principal reliance in this establishment. I know every detail of your business, I've worked up a big trade for you, and, to speak plainly, I don't see how you could get along without me."

"So?" queried the German, pensively, "Subbose, now, Louis, you die, vot I do then, eh?"

"Oh, in that case," replied Louis, hesitatingly, "I suppose you would have to get along without me."

For a few minutes the German remained silent. Finally he gently suggested:

"Vell, Louis, I dink maybe you had better consider yourself dead."

What Is Going On in the World of Amusements

THIS is the last week of Marie Tempest's successful engagement in "The Freedom of Suzanne" at the Empire. She will give eight performances this week, an extra matinée being set for Decoration Day. Next Saturday evening she will say farewell to local theatregoers, and on the following Wednesday with her company will sail away on the Oceanic.

David Warfield's last week at the Bijou begins to-morrow night. Mr. Warfield has had an exceptional season, playing not only the longest run, but filling the house at each performance. Early in September he will resume his portrayal of "The Music Master" at the Bijou.

With two months to its credit "The Heir to the Hoorah" continues to draw crowded houses at the Hudson. Out-of-town parties have been frequent during the past week, and a number of the leading private schools in town have booked large blocks of seats for matinée performances during the coming Commencement season.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

Sam Bernard and "The Rollicking Girl" begin their second month of rollicking success at the Herald Square to-morrow evening. On Memorial Day there will be an extra matinée. Hattie Williams, who is Mr. Bernard's partner in the funmaking, wins much applause with her songs, "Tricks" and "Friends That Are Good and True.

"Fantana" has passed its one hundred and fiftieth performance, and still continues to do fine business at the Lyric. While no new features have been added to the piece, Jefferson De Angelis's rendering of "Tammany," Katie Barry's singing of "My Word," and Julia Sanderson's "My Rickshaw of Bamboo" still continue to provoke enthusiastic applause. A special matinée will be given Memorial Day.

To-morrow night ushers in the sixth week of Frank Daniels in "Sergeant Brue" at the Knickerbocker. The musical comedy success has gathered enough impetus by this time to insure its thriving in town brilliantly until Autumn comes around. Mr. Daniels creates abundance of fun, and the catchy music, pretty girls, and effective stage pictures give a delightful evening's entertainment.

COMBINATION HOUSES.

Adelaide Keim and her stock company, at the Harlem Opera House, have made a most favorable impression on uptown theatregoers, and a successful season is practically assured. For the second week of the engagement Henry Miller's romantic drama success, "Heartsease," will be presented, this being the first time Mr. Miller has consented to its production in New York by another company than his own. Miss Keim will play the part of Margaret Neville, whose love affair with Eric Temple forms the basis of the story.

Bertha Kalich in "Fedora" is to remain at the American another week, the packed houses of the week just ended warranting the management to prolong her engagement. In the drama the stock company gives fine support and is deserving of the approval of the public. Early next season Mr. Fawcett intends to present Miss Kalich at a Broadway house.

"The Black Mask," a melodrama which has been familiar to playgoers, both American and English, for the last six years, will be the attraction at the New Star this week. The piece is from the pens of F. Marriott Watson and Sir A. Conan Doyle, the author of "Sherlock Holmes."

This week's offering by the stock company at the Yorkville Theatre will be a revival of Wilson Barrett's success, "The Silver King." Maurice Freeman, the new leading man of the company, is cast for the rôle of Wilfred Denver, and Anne Sutherland as Nellie Denver, the wife. The familiar character of Spider will be in the hands of Robert Cummings.

Williams and Walker, who have made an enormous hit at the Grand Opera House in their musical comedy "In Dahomey," will remain at that playhouse another week. After this time the company will disband for the season, having played a continuous season of a year and a half, both here and in London.

The fourth and last week of "Quincy Adams Sawyer" at the Academy of Music begins to-morrow night. The rural drama has met with much favor and has played to big houses. The production is very elaborate, and this, together with the large cast, has given opportunity for many fine effects.

Jacob P. Adler will play Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice" at Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre this week. The stock company will give him support. At the Thursday matinée a revival of "Camille" will be made, with Grace Reals in the title rôle.

The old-time melodrama, "The Span of Life," that has had so many successful seasons to its credit, will be the attraction at the Windsor for the week. The Donezetta trio of acrobats are with the company, and introduce their thrilling act.

"In the Palace of the King," F. Marion Crawford's novel which was dramatized for Viola Allen, will be the attraction this week at Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Theatre. To Miss Beatrice Morgan will be intrusted the part of Donna Dolores Mendoza, the rôle created by Miss Allen, and Mr. William J. Kelley will play Don John. Others in the cast include Mr. James E. Wilson, Miss Mary Ryan, Mr. Sol Aiken, Mr. Robert L. Hill, Mr. Scott Cooper, and Miss Deshon.

The souvenir matinées, Tuesdays and Thursdays, which were inaugurated last week with success will be continued May 30 and June 1, when photos of Miss Ryan and Mr. Wilson respectively will be distributed to all patrons.

VAUDEVILLE.

Edwin Stevens is the headliner for the bill at Keith's this week. He will appear in a series of original specialties, which will give him an opportunity to display his talents as a comedian. Julian Eltinge, late of Rice's "Shop Girl," is the second attraction. The remainder of the entertainers include Terley, impersonator; Belle Gordon, bag puncher; John Healy, black-face comedian; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Voelker, musicians; Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Barry in "A Skin Game." As an added attraction Alice Davenport will present her one-act dramatic sketch, "Now."

Another excellent programme is announced for Hammerstein's Victoria this week. May Yohe and Putnam Bradlee Strong head the bill, with Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne in "Town Hall To-night" as big second features. Prominent, also, on the programme are Eugene Cowles and the Hengler Sisters. The other entertainers are Charles Falk Seamon, musical comedian; Howard and North in "Those Were Happy Days," the Dollar Troupe of Acrobats, Herbert Brooks, Mills and Morris, the two Bostons, and the vitagraph.

Laura Burt will appear at Hurtig & Seamon's Music Hall during the coming week. Her offering will be "Stop, Thief!" one of Edmond Day's latest dramatic sketches. Miss Burt will be supported by a cast of eight players.

Of no less importance is the engagement of Nina Morris, Arthur Hoops and company in Brandon Hurst's comedietta, "A Friend's Advice." Both Miss Morris and Arthur Hoops are well-known Broadway favorites, and their début in vaudeville will be heartily welcomed. Dorothy Russell, the daughter of Lillian Russell, in songs; Jinks, humanlike gorilla, in connection with Galetti's monkeys; Harry Le Clair, the popular character comedian; McCue and Cahill, the vocalistic duo; Theodore Jukian, the belle of bells; Harry Thompson, the man with the goods; Carson Brothers, in gymnastic evolutions, and other features promise an exceptionally bright entertainment.

The last chance to see Albert Chevalier will be this week at the Colonial Theatre. The English entertainer heads the bill there in his full répertoire of old-time favorites. Mr. Chevalier sails for England immediately after this engagement.

Besides this important announcement Mr. Williams has provided a big bill of stars, with the Four Mortons and Louise Gunning sharing honors as headline features. Others engaged for the week are Bedini and Arthur, Delmore and Lee, Transatlantic Quartet, Cooper and Robinson, Delmore Sisters, Yalto Duo, and the vitagraph.

Adele Ritchie is the chief attraction this week at Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre. Miss Ritchie will sing a number of songs as a specialty, some of them her old successes, and some new ones written for her vaudeville season. Next in importance as entertainers are the Russell Brothers, who will present their sketch, "A Romance of New Jersey." The other acts will be in the hands of J. K. Murray and Clara Lane, O'Brien and Havel, Charles Wayne and his incubator babies, Cole and Johnson, Magani Family, and Mr. and Mrs. Searl Allen. The moving pictures will be new.

Starting with a matinée to-morrow, the Metropolis will inaugurate a supplementary season of vaudeville. The bill prepared by the management for this week includes many prominent vaudeville entertainers, such as Rooney's Street Urchins, Jane Courthope & Co., Bonnett and Rich, Clarice Vance, the Greysons, Ed Gray, Rice and Elmer, Parker's dogs, and the vitagraph.

At Huber's Fourteenth Street Museum this week Herr Ritter, the German illusionist, direct from Berlin, will make his first American appearance, presenting his celebrated box mystery and pillory.

John Paul Jones, the great naval hero, is the latest addition to the group, "People Talked About," at the Eden Musée. The figure has been made from the most authentic and historically correct pictures extant. The lines of the great Admiral have been reproduced with lifelike exactness. The "American Gallery" has been rearranged and brought up to date and includes representations of the principal historical events of 1776 to the death of Gen. Lawton in the Philippines.

+ + +

Heading the programme for the current week at the Alhambra are Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, who will present their clever one-act play, "Journey's End in Lover's Meeting." Following these two artists in importance is Herrmann the Great. Other attractions are Clayton White and Marie Stuart in their one-act comedy, "Paris," Louise Gunning, the favorite singer; the Union Gatling Guards, four Livingstons, Ed. Latell, and the vitagraph.

THE HIPPODROME.

The crowds still go to the Hippodrome. There has been no unoccupied chair at any night performance since "the largest playhouse in the world" opened on April 12, and the daily matinées have proved hardly less popular. The railroads are conducting excursions for the afternoon shows, and strangers for fifty miles and more distant find relish in taking the journey to see "A Yankee Circus on Mars" and "The Raiders." The man who provides the spring drinking water at the Hippodrome welcomes them. The rural visitors sometimes consume as much as fifty-five gallon bottles of the liquid in an afternoon. The quantity is in distinct contrast to the demand at night, when the audience is typically metropolitan. Then many of the supply stations empty not a drop during the entire performance.

The five Ballaster sisters, gymnasts of skill and daring, are among the newcomers in the circus department of the Hippodrome this week. They come direct from Berlin, and will find four troupes from the same German capital on the same American stage. The Clarkes have planned new riding feats; Albert Carre will present a new programme of dog, horse, and pony acts; Marcelina, the clown, promises innovations in funmaking, and the other artists are on their mettle.

A refrigerating plant has been installed, and Thompson & Dundy assure Summer patrons of ease and comfort.

BROOKLYN AMUSEMENTS.

To-morrow evening will see the inaugural of the fourth annual Spring opera season at the Orpheum Theatre, opening with Elsie Janis as the stellar feature in "The Little Duchess." Manager Williams, in his selection of operas to be presented, will deviate from his usual policy by giving his patrons two standard operas during the four-week series—"The Chimes of Normandy" for the second week and "The Bohemian Girl" for the fourth week. For the third week of the season "The Wedding Day" has been selected, on account of the success it achieved last ysar at the Orpheum.

"The Little Duchess" is the three-act comedy opera that Anna Held starred in several seasons ago. It broke all records during its run at the Casino in New York. Reginald De Koven wrote the music, and Harry B. Smith is the author of the libretto. The Orpheum production is to be given with the same scenery and accessories that were used in the original production.

Mr. Williams's original policy of changing the principals each week to meet the requirements of the opera to be given will be followed, the chorus remaining permanently throughout the four weeks. Many of the Orpheum favorites of former seasons will be seen again in rôles individually suited to them, notably Dorothy Morton, J. K. Murray, Clara Lane, William Blaisdell, Robert Lett, Grace Orr Myers, Frank Wooley, Joseph W. Smith, John J. Rafael, and many other leading lights of former Orpheum opera seasons. Summer prices will prevail at 25 and 50 cents.

DREAMLAND.

The illusion "Creation" is making a sensation at Dreamland, and constant crowds are seen at the attraction. The delay in opening "Hell Gate" and "Touring Europe" is due to machinists. It has taken much longer than anticipated to get the different parts in working order.

LUNA PARK.

The Iggorote Village has many visitors, who find much to interest them in the natives and their handiwork. "The Fall of Port Arthur," doubtless, will prove an enormous success, judging from its reception yesterday.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Port Arthur at Manhattan Beach is receiving its finishing touches, and Pain expects to have it open for an early season. Japanese and Russians are now drilling to take part in the spectacle.

The New Amsterdam Theatre closed its doors for the season last evening, and will remain dark until September, when it will open with Hall Caine's "Prodigal Son" as the attraction. A week from to-morrow evening the Aerial Theatre opens its Summer season with an offering staged in three parts. This will be presented somewhat after the Offenbach review, which was given at this theatre last Summer.

BACH CYCLE AT BETHLEHEM.

The Easter and Ascension festival of the Bach Cycle, given by the choir of the Moravian Church in Bethlehem, Penn., under Dr. J. Fred Wolle, will take place on June 1, 2, and 3. Afternoon and evening concerts will be given on each day, and the programmes will include on Thursday, June 1, four cantatas; on Friday, four cantatas, and in the afternoon the third Brandenburg concerto and the Suite in D. On Saturday the great B minor mass will be given, the first half in the afternoon, the last half in the evening. The evening performance on that day will begin at 6 o'clock, allowing out-of-town visitors to take trains to their destinations.

Annapolis Cadets as Their Fellows See Them---Features of "The Lucky Bag."

THIS year's issue of "The Lucky Bag" has just seen the light. The world at large has probably never before heard of that deliciously humorous publication, and yet this volume is the twelfth one of its kind. And it is impossible to dip into "The Lucky Bag" without pulling out something good.

The name is given to the official publication of the graduating class at Annapolis. And a most sumptuous work has the class of '05 produced. Red, soft chamois binding, with the name, the year, and the coat-of-arms of the academy in gold on the front cover. Contributions of "real art" from five well-known artists, including a charming vignette in colors by A. de Ford Pitney; a "tight" jacky of the glorious, old-fashioned kind, by Louis Glackens; one of Henry Reuterdahl's very businesslike torpedo boat pictures, and less conspicuous drawings by W. Gallaway and W. L. Jacobs. Add to this, in order to judge the artistic features of the publication justly, a hundred or more of very jolly and very clever cartoons by R. S. Furber, the class artist, some surprisingly good Christie imitations by Barratt, '04, and an endless number of pictures and portraits, showing every phase of Annapolis life, and almost every face connected with the academy.

The reading matter is not less varied and valuable in character, ranging from class history to poetic offerings to "the navy girl." But first and foremost must be mentioned in this line the class biographies, which give to each and every member of the graduating class just "what's coming to him" in the way of friendly gibes. The real name and native city of each member is followed by the nickname or nicknames by which the all of spemech." Of a number of cadets it is said:

"A long, frail person (the caricaturist has drawn a snake in the margin, with a cadet's head on it) with a brace like a boat davit, a childlike face lighted up at times with a look of almost human intelligence. When he laughs the world laughs at him, and the game leaves for parts unknown. Sings so charmingly that his hearers are moved to frenzy, and everything comes his way. If he ever did any work he is a good hand at keeping a secret. So generous that he gives himself away the moment he gets into the section room."

The editors of this publication have been fifteen in number, but the "main guys" were A. B. Court, editor in chief; E. G. Oberlin, business manager, and S. H. Lawton, Jr., assistant business manager. For the guidance of the unsophisticated non-Annapolite they have added a "Foolish Dictionary of Slang," from which many interesting things may be learned. Such, for instance, as that a "cook" is not one who produces culinary marvels but "one who acts in a loving way toward the ladies"; while "to cook" means "to be warm on known answers," in other words, to have by heart the answers known to be wanted by some instructors to certain standard questions. To hurry up is to "shake a leg," and to escort a lady home is properly described as "dragging a female." And of "to innermost self as seen by his classmates has become expressed. There are all sorts of names, such as the caressing "Madge," the scientifically ironical "XS," the opaque "Belledeny," the palpable "Goose," the gently sarcastic "Dot Boy," the rude "Squirt," and the obvious "Texas." Some cadets have only one, but they are few, and some have as many as five or six, and in this connection it is well to remember the Arab proverb that "a favorite child has many names."

The biographies are somewhat too intimate to be enjoyed by the outsider as they deserve, and yet it is not necessary to be an Annapolis graduate of the class of '05 in order to appreciate the humor that says of the member known as "Lis" when he is not called "Runt," that whenever he was punished it was for being caught, not for what he did, or that tells us about "Pickles" that he is "somewhat of a moneyed man, owning a first mortgage on the telephone system of Annapolis, but always has to borrow a nickel to use it."

Another student is briefly described as being "last in war, last in peace, and last in every formation"; still another one is accused of being "possessed with an old fiddle and the devil, which break out simultaneously, and which always bring down the wrath of the corridor." "The Swede," who comes from Iowa, is unfeelingly referred to as "a part of our foreign element." Another member from the same State is alleged "to resemble a bovine so much that one almost expects him to say 'moo' at a stranger." A California man, variously nicknamed "Agnes" and "Cow," has, according to the biographer, "originated a peculiar process of making Bessemer steel with clined to take his studies at his ease it is gently hinted that "he has worked out by Simpson's rule that he beats the Government out of 10 cents for every hour he sleeps, and expects to be rich soon by this means." But here is a complete specimen of a biography that will give the reader a better idea of the merits of the work. Of "Poodles" this is said:

given: "To secure the sleek appearance of somebody's fur by rubbing it the right way." Proper objects of greasing are in particular members of the Faculty. A "spoon," finally, is "one who befriends a plebe," and the latter word is used to designate a member of the freshman class. The history of this class, named from its graduating year, '08, is also found among the reading matter, and must be quoted for the benefit of anxious mammas and prospective students:

"We were a varied collection of youths who gathered here last June, and who, inspired by noble impulses and patriotism, had left home, mother, and sweetheart(?) with our futures laid out in glory and honor to become Admirals in Uncle Sam's navy. But what a drop! From predestined conquerors of nations we dropped down and down until, as we finally reached Annapolis and found that we were only one of very many heroes to be, we felt as if we had fallen from infinity and landed on sip.

"Our class history begins June 6, 1904, when we first became midshipmen. Those first few weeks were novel. We were as green as 'Mike's' hair is red, and what we knew about drills and seamanship could easily be printed in large type on the back of a postage stamp. But, like all our 'preds,' we had that serene feeling of importance due to our realisation that we really were midshipmen until our first cutter drill. Then our pipes went out, and our dream was over. Oh, joy! Those lovely blisters and delightful (?) races from the lighthouse in to the Santee wharf. But that was not all; the old Santee was very popular with the 'funnels,' each of whom spent a month on the 'yacht,' and we can say that we Following a spirited account of the year's football game with West Point appears a fac simile—on blue paper with monogram in gold—of a letter written by a Philadelphia girl to the managers of the game and asking for tickets. It is worth quoting in full, with a hope added that she got the tickets:

"Please, kind Sirs, if there are two tickets for the Army and Navy game what ain't working will you send them to a little girl (of 19 or so) what wants to go to that more awful game. The Farmer given by the French department were not thoroughly enjoyed?

"However, the Summer passed very rapidly, and September paid us a short visit. We then experienced our first work aloft, and one very small but old and dignified member of the class remarked of the working on the main royal that it was the nearest to heaven he had ever been. October arrived with its many surprises and novelties. The upper class men began to take a great interest in us, and to see that we did everything in the proper manner. Their kind, sympathetic remarks have had their effect on us from the start.

"Our chief pastime now is dreaming of our first cruise and leave, and looking forward to a certain day in June some three and a half years hence, when, like the class which has honored us with these pages, we can look back on our four years as midshipmen with the greatest pride and joy."

Note, please, the grateful reference to the kind interest displayed by the seniors in the plebes, and do not err by suspecting that expression of sincere appreciation to have flowed from the pen of a sarcastic '05 man.

tickets year before last, told me Somebody's Celery Compound was good for the 'nerve.' I took seven consecutive bottles before I could muster courage to write this. But then I says to myself, says I, nothing venture, nothing have. Besides, I know you are not so hard hearted as to let a poor 'orphint' weep real weeps just because she can't go to the game, especially as she is a 'really and truly, black and bluely, lay me down and cut me intwoly navy girl.' With best wishes for my success in this venture, I am, yours for the navy.

("Miss) F. J. W."

The contributions obtained by the editors are not signed; and that is a pity, for some of them are mighty good. Here are as samples a couple of poems:

THE TORPEDO ATTACK.

Stealthily, shadowy, see them glide
Out of the darkness night,
With never a light to attract a shot
From the ships that are hid from sight.

Craftily, fearlessly, how they come
Into the guarded bay;
And many that watch in the mighty ships
Will not see the break of day.

Murderous, pitiless, rushing through,
Leaving a wake of foam,
Messengers sent by the war-god, Death,
To hasten the chosen home.

And with the other one—a note of tender, wistful melancholy stealing through the merry bugle blasts of triumphant youth—this article may aptly close:

THE CLOSE OF DAY.

The day is dying,
The gulls low flying,
The wind is falling,
The ocean calm.

Sweet bells are ringing,
Sailors are singing,
Old yarns are spinning,
("Six bells" has gone.)

Through darkness falling,
The bugle is calling,
Lights out till the morning,
The day is dead.

For the Three-quarter Foot

FOR the girl who has a foot that is between the full and half sizes the shoe man has been thinking lately, and now she can get her exact measure in a quarter size. This means a great deal not only in the fit of the shoe, but in the sound of the number. The athletic young women of to-day, tall and well developed, have pedal extremities in proportion, and the sizes of shoes and hosiery they wear are sometimes too large to be mentioned in polite society.

"They would wear 10's and 11's if they could get them in hosiery," says the wo-white beauties who come to her to be fitted out with dainty gossamer things in silk and lisle thread, "and the shoes they wear in proportion."

Six is a common size, and not the largest. A girl likes to have a small foot even in these days of common sense thought and living, and the quarter sizes shoes help her out in this. If [illegible] that 5, 5½, and 6 will be a trifle too [illegible] or just a little too long, and that [illegible] the extra sizes come in. The [illegible] ordinarily wears a 5 shoe comes [illegible] a 4½, the 5½ to 5¾, and the [illegible] been obliged to confine [illegible]

GARIFILIA, THE GREEK GIRL

MISS ANNE HALL, AT 30

BATHSHEBA MUMFORD

Her Unique Position Half a Century Ago in the Art World Recalled by a Revival of Interest in the Collection of Her Work Found in the Famous Old Mansion in Bond Street.

THE proposed affiliation of the Academy of Design with Columbia University recalls a fact, interesting in a day of feminine aggressiveness, that the earliest of the city's art institutions had scarcely been incorporated five years when it elected to inner membership a woman.

Equal suffrage, higher education, women clubs, and the "lady reporter" were then unknown quantities in social economics, in consequence, without "fuss or feather, book or candle," Miss Anne Hall was made Academician and entitled to add N. A. to her signature. But one other woman, Miss Cecilia Beaux, has been similarly honored, although the Academy has elected six women associates since its foundation—Mrs. Eliza Greatorex, Mrs. M. Bogardus, both deceased, and Miss Fidelia Bridges, Mrs. Louise Cox, Mrs. Henry A. Loop, and Miss Amanda Brewster Sewell.

Yellowed with the dust of nigh seventy-five years is the parchment officially certifying to the distinction conferred upon her by co-workers in spreading the Gospel of Beauty in which sex was then an unconsidered trifle. The parchment bearing the seal of the Academy is signed by William Dunlap, Vice President, the same who wrote thirty-four years later a "History of Design in America," in which tribute is paid Miss Hall's talent, the only record in print of a long life faithfully and conscientiously devoted to art.

Irrespective of sex, Anne Hall, in the America of half a century ago, was unquestionably the most accomplished and successful miniature painter. Having flourished at a time when all art in the New World was embryonic, and that distinctive field in which her laurels were won had begun to deteriorate both in England and the Continent, lends peculiar significance, in the present American miniature renaissance, to Miss Hall's achievements.

Effort is being made to bring about in the near future an exhibition of Miss Hall's miniatures at the Metropolitan Museum, the National Arts Club, or some similar fitting place.

Not since a portrait exhibition of fair women, held many, many years ago at the Metropolitan Museum's first home, in Fourteenth Street, when the wife of Dr. Louis Sayre loaned family portraits painted by her aunt, Miss Anne Hall, has this pioneer miniaturist's work been seen by the public.

With the romantic passing some two years ago of the famous old mansion, 23 Bond Street, where Anne Hall lived and painted, a collection of her miniatures, that had been shut up there for thirty years, was unearthed. It is now the inherited property of Mr. John Partridge Jepson of Brooklyn. Aside from numerous finished portraits, are ivories, in varied stages of development, including several of the artist's first sketches, disclosing the travail through which her art passed before enshrinement in the velvet or metal cases in which they have been buried all these vanished years. Not the least interesting gems of this collection are child portraits.

Here in a group are Julia Ward Howe and her brothers, Samuel and Henry, at the ages of ten, eleven, and thirteen years; a single miniature of Sam Ward when he had achieved renown as diplomat, poet, bon viveur, and a charming miniature of his young daughter, Margaret Astor Ward, who became the wife of Winthrop Chanler, besides many other family portraits whose subjects were more or less widely known.

Now that the past ten years have witnessed here the foundation of an American Society of Miniature Painters, almost wholly composed of women, whose exhibits are annual affairs, and women of title have taken to coming here to exhibit their miniature work, conjuring from under the nose of home talent orders at prices "beyond dream of avarice," it would be no less interesting than instructive to study wherein lay Miss Hall's merits or demerits in that most fascinating, if not most luxuriant, of the arts.

Few were the celebrities of the social, literary, or political life of the thirties, forties, or fifties that failed to sit for his or her miniature to Anne Hall in the quaint studio at the top of the famous Henry Hall Ward mansion, 23 Bond Street, while old families of Boston and the South still treasure in gold and monogramed frames the beaus and belles her brush has preserved to posterity.

Third daughter of Dr. John Hall of Pomfort, Conn., where she was born, her brothers were eminent jurists, lawyers, and social lights of old New York, while a sister, Eliza, also a painter of talent, was the wife of Henry Ward, whose home was a centre of culture. It was her brother Charles Henry Hall who gave Tompkins Square to New York. He at one time owned Harlem, where his breeding farms were famous for the first imported sheep and blooded horses.

Anne Hall began miniature painting at a very early age in Newport under S. King, the instructor at Alston. She was greatly encouraged in her art studies by her brother Charles, who brought from Europe, in a day when an ocean trip was almost a National event, an art collection almost wholly unheard of—old paintings by the best Italian painters. Copying these old masters occupied those tentative days, strengthening and refining a naturally virile and sensitive feeling for color which later lent beauty and distinction to her portraiture from life. To this brother Charles she was also indebted for supply of brushes and paints. Her copy on ivory of a Holy Family by Tintoretto is still quoted as her masterpiece. It was exhibited and greatly praised, and is still spoken of, several copies being preserved. The original copy, I believe, is in the Jepson collection.

Letters still in the family archives disclose that Anne Hall had from the first her brother Charles's assurance of faith in her talent and belief that perseverance in its development would bring her a life of happiness and independence.

How clear was his foresight, Miss Hall's career from the day she took up her residence in New York until her death in 1863, at the ripe age of seventy-one, substantiates, for aside from a spinsterhood passed in the choicest and most appreciative social environment, here and elsewhere, she left an estate valued at $100,000, almost wholly the earnings of her brush.

To appreciate Miss Hall's achievement in so exacting an art as miniature, it is well to consider the conditions under which this pioneer woman worked.

There was not one art school in New York when Anne Hall at the ripe age of thirty-nine was elected Academician.

A Metropolitan Museum, third to none in the Old World, a Fifth Avenue flanked for miles with art galleries full of the best of ancient and modern art, picture sales at which thousands of dollars are tossed back and forth like balls in ping pong in the mad desire of museum, collector, or dealer to possess masters, then had no place in the dream of the most optimistic Knickerbocker. There were no Art Students' League, Cooper Union, or Women's School of Applied Design, while studios could be counted on the fingers of one hand.

Where to-day there are so many hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of old masters there was not then in the breadth of the land a single bona fide old master.

Still it was Anne Hall's privilege to visit the first public exhibition of such paintings ever held in America.

She was then a girl of about sixteen, and had come to New York to study oil painting in the studio of Robertson, the most excellent teacher of his time. The collection had been picked up by Col. John Trumbull while in Paris on his way home from England, where he had served as private secretary to John Jay, the American Ambassador to the Court of St. James's. That was in 1808. The exhibition was held in a vacant room in the old Park Theatre. Although the proprietor contributed the rent, the receipts of the exhibition did not pay for the unpacking of the pictures. Disgusted with the want of art appreciation in New York, John Trumbull returned to England with his collection, which eventually fell under the hammer, and in all probability returned in time to Paris. The collection was said to have had many fine examples of the Italian and Dutch school which Napoleon caused to be flung out of public and private palaces and galleries, dubbing them "unsightly black daubs."

There were no beautifully illustrated periodicals, as in these opulent days, to keep Anne Hall in touch with what the miniaturists of England and France were doing. It's not unlikely that she was unaware that at that very time Mrs. Mae, daughter of the English painter, was the favorite miniaturist of George IV., to whose favor no less than to her skill she owes the prominence given her miniatures to this day in two royal collections.

That Trumbull, fresh from London, where his studio and his work were prominent, frequently sought Miss Hall upon his second return to New York, is evidenced in the letters found in her correspondence. Mid the odor of lavender and broken seals of this epistolary art of a vanished century came as a discordant note Trumbull's letter asking Miss Hall to receive kindly a young woman he was sending to her. She was ambitious to become a miniature painter, and had heard of Miss Hall's success!

Many of Miss Hall's miniatures were painted at Boston, which she frequently visited. It was while sitting for her portrait to Alexander, in his studio, that she met Mohalbi Garafilia—the heroine of the hour. Garafilia was a young Greek girl rescued from the Turks when about seven years old and taken to Smyrna. There she was ransomed by the United States Consul, Mr. Langdon, of Boston, who sent her to his father, in whose family she was educated. In Alexander's studio Miss Hall painted the miniature of this picturesque, opulent beauty. It was greatly praised and widely exhibited, adding to her reputation. The original is to-day the property of Miss Vivian Ward of Grimes Hill, S. I. An unfinished copy, the expression of the face more subtle and beautiful than that of the original, is in the Jepson collection.

Anne Hall had great admiration for the talent of her sister, Mrs. Henry Ward. Miniatures the sisters painted of each other are in the collection of Dr. Reginald Sayre, who inherited them from his mother, a daughter of Charles Henry Ward. Both miniatures are quaint in the coiffeurs of the time—a part in the middle, with hair drawn down over ears, one side painfully smooth, the other fringed with delicate corkscrew curls—a bit of fetching coquetry.

The one unsatisfied desire of Anne Hall's singularly happy and successful career was her failure to see the Old World and study under Old-World masters. That a woman of her wealth and position should have been denied what to-day is so common a privilege may seem strange, but it must not be forgotten that, despite Anne Hall's talent and her bread-winning capacity, she was a woman of the old school, with little or nothing in common with our fearless bachelor girl.

Then no atelier abroad was open to women. It remained for an American girl—Elizabeth Gardner, (Mrs. William Bougereau)—ten years after Anne Hall had passed away, to force open the doors of the Julien Studio—the first in Paris to receive a woman art student. All womankind owe a debt of eternal gratitude to Elizabeth Gardner, who shortly after the Commune shingled her hair, donned boy's clothes, and entered the Gobelin schools to accomplish such excellent work that Bougereau subsequently admitted her to Julien, thereby opening the way to the women art students of the world.

Curiously, while Anne Hall was at the zenith of productiveness and vogue—it was then the Alexander portrait was painted—Dr. Henry Draper, in the laboratory of the University of New York, in Washington Square, within a few squares of Anne Hall's studio was developing the art destined for almost half a century to extinguish miniature painting. Indeed, such a revolution did photography make in public taste that long before Anne Hall's death the daguerreotype, the carte de visite, had quite supplanted the miniature.

Some Personal Reminiscences of Mary A. Livermore---By an Old Friend

TO "live worthily" was the keynote of the character of Mrs. Livermore. In a private letter received from her soon after the death of her husband, some seven years ago, she wrote:

"Among the last words of Mr. Livermore was his wish that I would go on as I had been living. 'Don't give up any work in which you are engaged; only don't overdo,' he said. I have great need of work now. It is to me more than money, sympathy, food, or raiment. I must live worthily. I cannot be overborne now, at the close of my life, by sorrow, depression, and loneliness."

With the enthusiasm of youth, united with the noble energy of a long life devoted to persistence in ideal aims, this woman, then in her seventy-ninth year, began what was practically a new departure in her achievements. The desolation of a great sorrow had come to her, but it was something to be transmuted into good for others. She turned, not away from life in the selfish isolation of grief, but gave herself to it with a new consecration to humanity. She had no longer any need to work for fame or for gain. If she possessed the former it was merely the incidental attendant, or, rather, the inevitable result of noble effort whose purpose was helpfulness to humanity. Her service was for the sake of progress, and never for the sake of mere individual prominence.

Of gain she had a modest competence, and she was therefore free to give herself to a more personal line of service than ever before. Heretofore her work, like that of all great leaders, had dealt largely with the masses. Now it was to deal with the individual. She became the counselor, almost the confessor, of a large and a constantly increasing number. Her morning mail was fairly a panorama of life. One morning I sat by her side as she went through dozens of letters, largely from strangers. To a considerable degree these were moral and social problems which the writers brought before her for solution. They ranged over the entire economic, clerical, educational, and domestic life.

She had the rare quality of giving the strength of sympathy without its degeneration into weakness; she stimulated and inspired to renewed hope and courage. There was no mawkish sentimentality in this extraordinary work, and she had the subtle art of combining the most sympathetic tenderness with bracing cheer, and thus communicating energy for renewed endeavor. To a good degree a great part of the work of Phillips Brooks was in this line, but it is impossible for any man or woman who is in active work to give this order of aid constantly. In her earlier life Mrs. Livermore could not have done this, but it seemed the last golden opportunity given her on earth, one which she, indeed, herself created by this generous and noble attitude in the experience of a great sorrow.

Born in Boston Dec. 20, 1820, Mary Ashton Rice (later Mrs. Livermore) was one of that remarkable galaxy of people who, as poets, reformers, and thinkers, have left an immortal impress on the Nation. This group, beginning with Bronson Alcott (born in 1799) and ending with Edward Everett Hale, (born in 1822,) included Lydia Maria Child, Garrison, Emerson, Theodore Parker, Elizabeth Peabody, Edwin P. Whipple, Longfellow, Lowell, Dr. Holmes, Whittier, Sumner, Lucy Stoffe, Julia Ward Howe, James Freeman Clarke, Margaret Fuller, Col. Higginson, and Mary A Livermore, for although Alcott was born in Connecticut, Julia minister whose message did not seem to redeem his people, the young man who longed to enter Harvard without visible ways and means, the husband and wife whose marriage was inharmonious, the self-supporting woman whose means of livelihood had failed, the college professor who sought to do more effective work for his classes, the student and thinker who was by no means sure of immortality and who sought the sources of her convictions—these and numberless other problems of the individual life were brought to her, and to each and all she gave of her best judgment and thought.

cally they were all a Boston group; a constellation of remarkable individualities who brought with them the living coal from heaven, and lighted those altar fires whose glow is unfading, men and women whose nobleness and power and sacrifice and whose simple and fervent faith in God and in humanity have made their Boston the City of Beautiful Ideals. The spiritual divination of Emerson, the exquisite sweetness and charm and beauty of Longfellow, the divine messages of Whittier, the wit and power and irresistible brilliancy of Dr. Holmes, the marvelous insights into the divine laws of the universe opened to the world by Benjamin Pierce, of whom Dr. Holmes wrote:

> For him the Architect of all
> Unroofed an planet's star-lit hall;
> Through voids unknown to worlds unseen
> His clearer vision rose serene.
> With us on earth he walked by day;
> His midnight path, how far away!
> To him the wandering stars revealed
> The secrets in their cradle sealed.

This great galaxy—Emerson, Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes, and Pierce; Margaret Fuller, the seer and diviner of spiritual states; Elizabeth Peabody, the great educator; Lowell, with his messages of fire and flame in the hour of a great National crisis; Lucy Stone, the heroic initiator of better conditions for women, and Mary A. Livermore whose crowning work of a marvelously potent life lies in the force and clearness of her portrayal of Immortality—in that absolute unity between the life that now is and that which is to come—this galaxy had no star more luminous than the noble woman who has just passed on into the life more abundant.

As reformer, writer, leader in the sanitary commission in the civil war, as lecturer and friend, Mrs. Livermore touched life at almost every point. Now, in the light of its completion on earth, to spell her life backward, like the Chaldeans, it reveals itself as a logical and harmoniously related series of increasing the Christmas holidays in the little seacoast town of Duxbury, Mass., and on Christmas eve she wandered out for a walk. The sea was at flood tide, and the moonlight traced its silver track across the bay. She found herself near the Universalist Church, "when," as she narrated the story to me one day, "a triumphant burst of song rang out on the night air, 'Glory to God in the highest.' Again the glad song was repeated, as if the singers were unable to repress their joy," she continued, "and I listened till the anthem was ended. Should I enter?"

All unknown to Mary Rice she stood at that moment at the crisis of destiny—the hour determining all her future. It was, indeed, the psychological moment. She entered. A blond young man was in the pulpit. "He shall save His people from their sins." The young woman mentally repeated this, saying to herself, "That is not the correct reading," but the preacher went on and she listened. "A great peace stole over me," she said; "a pulsation of love for all the world throbbed through my being." She remained after the service to speak to the minister, Mr. Livermore. Within a year they were married and set up their household gods in Fall River. His salary was $300 a year and she supplemented this by teaching and writing. Later they removed to Boston, where Mrs. Livermore was drawn into active relations with the immortal group of workers, and still later they settled in Chicago. When that great cry of need came from the Sanitary Commission Dr. Livermore urged her to accept it, saying, "Mary, you are called to the angelic side of the war." To go forth to help, to heal, to comfort; to speak the last words to the dying, to carry consolation to the bereaved—this was the work to which, through her husband's sustaining counsel, she gave herself with an intelligent zeal, a wise discretion, a genius for organization never excelled.

The war over, Mrs. Livermore entered on her eventful lecturing experience, during which for a long period of years she she made her début on the platform, and whatever her theme—social ideals, temperance, woman suffrage, politics, literature, or affairs—she everywhere aroused, stimulated, and uplifted the people. From the great statesman, the brilliant litterateur, to the most humble woman in domestic life—all thronged to hear Mrs. Livermore. Of late years she had more than once given by special request in Boston her wonderful lecture on Lincoln, in which her power and pathos, her insight into the springs of life, and her comprehensive grasp of National destinies were impressively revealed.

A few years ago the rector of a prominent church in Boston went to Mrs. Livermore with a request that she would address the young men of his parish on temperance. He told her they were the very flower of aristocracy, culture, and wealth—young men to whom all the kingdoms of earth, at all events, were open, but who were undermining their powers by fashionable intemperance. The rector warned Mrs. Livermore that the regulation temperance rhetoric would have no effect at all on this particular audience. So she essayed a new tack. She primed herself with the scientific side of the subject; the disintegrating effect of alcohol on the physical nature; its power to sap the springs of vitality and weaken the intellectual powers. The occasion and the hour came. An audience that taxed the resources of the lecture room was present, not only the men, but their mothers, sisters, and sweethearts. The attitude was that of a polite indifference—a courteous nonchalance that was intended to convey to the lecturer that they had no particular objection to hearing her, but that she might as well accept, as a foregone conclusion, the fact that nothing she could say would have any weight with them.

Mrs. Livermore contemplated her hearers and was in nowise disturbed. She opened her discourse. She marshaled fact after fact of scientific data from unquestionable authority. Her hearers seemed to revive and they took on an air of alert inquiring into her data and instances, and recording the names of author and scientist from whom she had quoted. As she entered her carriage they brought her a gigantic box of American Beauty roses—a perfect forest of blazing splendor, which required the services of policeman and brakeman to safely transfer into the local train carrying her to her home in Melrose.

Her simple home, its windows framing views of the blue lake near, embowered in trees through which gleam the outline of the purple hills of Melrose Highlands, was a delightful one, with its wealth of books, its souvenirs of art and travel, its countless gifts. Separated only by a portiere from her own room was Mrs. Livermore's study. The walls were lined with books that overflowed in revolving cases by her desk. Here she worked every morning. It was not unusual for one day's mail to deposit seventy-five letters on her desk, and nothing short of her instinct of order and her wonderful power of organized work, her intense directive energy, saved her from being overwhelmed by the tide of demands on her. She was full of playful humor, and one of her favorite anecdotes was of the words of Whittier to her at one time when they met in some gathering.

"Mary, how old art thou?" he asked.

"Sixty-nine, Greenleaf," she replied.

"Get thee hence, get thee hence," he rejoined; "thou'rt nothing but a 'giddy girl.'"

Boston celebrated Mrs. Livermore's eightieth birthday by a public meeting, and in her reply to the felicitations on the occasion she said: "Do not speak of me as going down hill. I am going up hill. I am on the upward slope and beyond is the sunrise."

Into that radiant dawn has she entered, leaving the world far

> "the better for her being
> And gladder for her human speech."

Her noble life has left its immortal impress.

"No work begun shall ever pause to death," says Browning, and the highland beautiful energy of Mary Livermore will find still more harmonious conditions for its effective achievement in that life more abundant on which she has entered.

With the King Bequest of $100,000 There Is Practically $800,000 Available for Pushing the Work---Architect Says That with a Full Treasury the Cathedral Might Be Completed in 10 Years at a Cost of $10,000,000 ---Dr. Huntington's Views.

A FEW days ago another bequest of $100,000 for the erection of one of the chapels of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine was announced in the will of Mrs. Mary A. King, widow of Edward A. King of Newport, who recently died in this city. This bequest, taken with a recent statement from the treasurer of the Cathedral, C. F. Hofman of 4 Warren Street, showing that there is on hand in the Cathedral treasury, or pledged, the sum of approximately $800,000, adds a fresh and much-needed impetus to the building of this monumental structure, the completion of which will give to New York an ecclesiastical edifice that will rank with the great ones of all time.

Fourteen years ago, in the Summer of 1891, the plans for the Cathedral submitted by the firm of Heins & La Farge, in a competition including many of our leading architects, were chosen by the Committee appointed for that purpose, and in the following year the actual work of construction was commenced. Since that time there has been an expenditure of about $2,100,000 in erecting as much of the building as is shown to-day. Up to the first of this year $2,600,000 had been contributed in all, $500,000 of this sum going to the Endowment Fund to be used for the maintenance of the Cathedral.

"The building of a Cathedral of this type," said Mr. Heins of Heins & La Farge the other day, "is unlike the work of putting up the modern skyscraper. In the latter the steel frame that forms the skeleton of the growing edifice permits of work being done on the different stories simultaneously, and calls into play numerous labor-saving devices and modern machinery. But the great stone cathedral has no skeleton of steel upon which its various parts may be built at one and the same time. Like the giant oak, it must rear its massive frame gradually, piece by piece, putting out its branches—its transepts, nave, choir, and chapels—slowly and carefully, with a growth scarcely perceptible from day to day, its main body, or trunk, attaining its full height only when all the rest is finished.

"Like the king of the forest, also, towering above his brethren, the mighty stone cathedral when completed gives an impression of power and vast stability that is not to be found in any building of the exclusively modern steel-frame type. There is something in the mere sight of these great stones, piled one on the other, springing out in huge arches and soaring aloft in tower and spire, that testifies to the strength and permanence of the central idea typified by and embodied in the building itself. Fancy a cathedral built on a steel framework, whose top could be completed as soon as its basement! The religious meaning and significance of the structure would be destroyed at once, and the effect of massiveness and durability that holds the eye and awakens a feeling of reverence in the venerable Cathedrals of the Old World would be decidedly weakened had the ponderous blocks of stone that compose them been mixed with any lighter material. Architecture depends for its effects quite as much on the character of the substances that it uses as upon the form and design into which these are molded. The great Hall of Carnack, with its stone columns ten or twelve feet thick, or the monoliths of Baalbec and Persepolis, modeled in wood or plaster—how grotesque and meaningless they would be!

"Just as the materials used in the construction of a cathedral are the same as those in vogue centuries ago, the methods employed to-day depart but slightly from those familiar to the first cathedral builders. We know that St. Peter's at Rome was 120 years in building, Canterbury Cathedral 425 years, Strasburg Cathedral 115 years, St. Paul's 35 years. The difference in time taken to complete these buildings was not due to any difference in the skill or appliances used by their respective architects, but simply to the amount of money each had within reach at any one time. It takes as long to build a cathedral now as it did a thousand years ago."

"If St. Peter's or St. Paul's were to be built in these modern times, would not the period needed for their erection be much less than that actually used in completing them centuries ago?"

"There are some labor-saving devices to-day," Mr. Heins replied to this query, "that help somewhat in the cutting of stone. We are thus enabled to do the same amount of work with fewer men than was formerly possible. This saving, however, does not tell appreciably on the length of time consumed in the building of a great cathedral as compared with what would have been necessary in more primitive ages. Probably we are able to do the work more economically to-day, although even here it is doubtful if there has been as much advance as we moderns are apt to suppose. On the whole, the methods in vogue with us in the building of these great monumental works are about the same as they have always been. Sir Christopher Wren or Michael Angelo fronting the same problems now would find virtually the same implements to their hands with which to overcome them. With them as with us the one obstacle in the way of carrying such a work through in the least possible time is the lack of money.

"How long would it take to complete the Cathedral of St. John the Divine? With a full treasury, probably the work could be done in ten years from to-day, and at a cost of about $10,000,000. We have already spent fourteen years in the undertaking, but, owing to the lack of funds, from time to time, the work has not been continuous. What has been done, however, although to the eye it appears insignificant in amount, compared with what remains to do, is really a portion of the work that consumes the most time. Now that it is finished, the rest of the building could go on more rapidly, with results more appreciable to the onlooker than heretofore—if the necessary money were supplied continuously.

"To the question as to the architectural type of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, it is somewhat difficult to give a comprehensive and, at the same time, not a misleading answer. The building when completed will not be an exponent of any one type or school of architecture. It is not in any sense of the word a copy, although in it may be found features and effects characteristic of various well-known examples of the great schools of the past. It is Gothic with much of the thinness of the pure Gothic eliminated and a certain robustness, massiveness added. It will include both rounded and pointed arches, hence the style, if it must have a name by which to designate it, might be called transition Gothic. The fact of its being what is technically known as 'vaulted' renders it unique in the architecture of this country, and places it in an extremely rare class of buildings in the Old World.

"As for size, there are no church buildings in this country, of course, to be compared with it. It will be 65 feet taller than St. Paul's, London, and 20 feet longer. The cathedrals of Amiens, Antwerp, and Salisbury also have a less height than ours will have, while it exceeds many of these world-famous edifices in length and other dimensions."

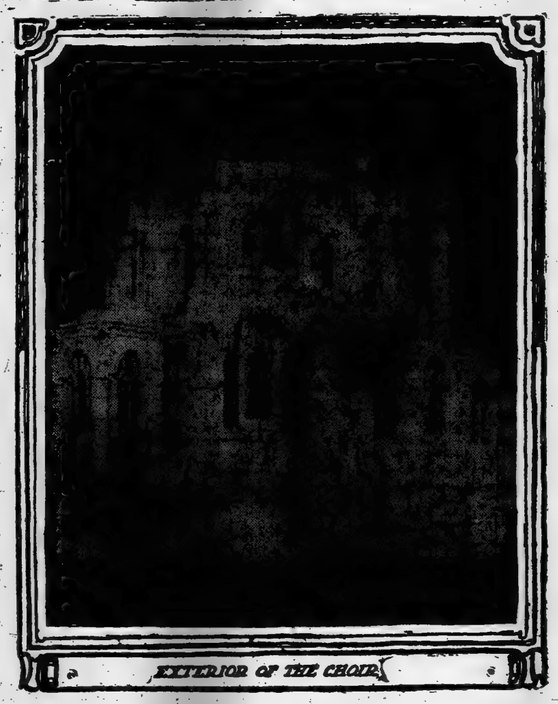
When finished the Cathedral of St. John the Divine will occupy a unique position in this country, not architecturally only, but in church organization. A cathedral, in the primitive sense of the term, has been unknown, heretofore, in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States.

"The words 'cathedral church,'" explained Dr. W. R. Huntington, rector of Grace Church and Chairman of the Cathedral Building Committee, "signify 'church of the chair.' Whose chair? Evidently the Bishop's chair. That is to say, the cathedral is the symbol or visible sign of episcopacy, or government by oversight; and not the symbol only, but the implement as well, for part of its purpose is to aid the Bishop in carrying out his administrative designs.

"The primitive cathedral was, and the American cathedral should aspire to become, distinctively the Bishop's church. And this not in the sense of a parish church whose rector, wardens, and vestrymen have assigned to the Bishop a seat of honor in their chancel, but on the contrary a wholly non-parochial organization, of which the Bishop is not merely the ornament but the recognized executive and head.

"Assuming approximately different types of cathedrals, the question arises, What type is the Cathedral of St. John the Divine to be? Is it to be a cathedral of the diocese, or of the city? Is it to be the church of the Bishop of the diocese, or of the Bishop of the city? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Long Island? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Albany? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Western New York? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Central New York? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Northern New York? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Southern New York? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Eastern New York? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Western New York? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Central New York? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Northern New York? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Southern New York? Is it to be the church of the diocese of New York, or of the diocese of Eastern New York?



EXTERIOR OF THE CHOIR

"The pulpit of the cathedral must be one of whose utterances we shall have no reason to be ashamed. The Bishop of the diocese can only be depended on to preach at intervals. Not only must he have deputies resident and on the spot to share this branch of the duty with him, but he must have it in his power to summon select preachers and lecturers from beyond the precincts of the cathedral, as occasion may demand.

"In the line of direct educational work," added Dr. Huntington, "not very much can be expected of a cathedral situated as ours will be. A diocesan library ought to be maintained and a school for choristers, but for more than these it is scarcely necessary that provision be made. It must not be forgotten that New York is already the seat of a School of Divinity which it would be both hopeless and foolish for any diocesan seminary to attempt to rival, and as respects secular education it is enough that Trinity School is already as closely linked to the cathedral as it need ever be by the fact that the Bishop of the diocese is, ex officio, the head of both corporations. Should Trinity School ever see its way to establishing itself in the near neighborhood of the cathedral, the fact of its doing so would only emphasize an existing relation. There is, however, a method by which the friendship of the cathedral toward all forms of good learning might be made manifest, and that would be the giving to the President of Columbia College, the Warden of St. Stephen's Annandale, the Head Master of Trinity School, the Warden of the Training School for Deaconesses, and the Examining Chaplains of the diocese sharea, ex officiis, a part in the government of the institution."

About five years ago a portion of the crypt of the cathedral was completed and has been used since then for the regular services of the church. This crypt is under a portion of the floor of what will be the choir, and can accommodate 500 people. This is entirely inadequate to meet the growing needs of the worshippers that attend the cathedral, however, and hence every effort has been made to complete some more spacious part of the structure as soon as possible. Last year, owing to a lack of funds, very little work was done. It was an off year in the matter of cathedral construction, and gave rise to fears that the building would be greatly delayed. The munificent donations that have now just been made to revive the lagging work insure a new era of activity and the speedy completion of a part of the cathedral that will be larger and more suitable for its worship than is now furnished by the crypt.

"It is estimated that $500,000 would complete the choir," said Dr. Huntington, referring to this subject. "But since the choir, if finished, would only accommodate a comparatively small number of worshippers, it is, in the judgment of the committee, highly desirable that, in addition to the great stone arch now standing, there should be built the three similar ones needed to inclose the 'crossing.' Were the ground thus bounded to be temporarily roofed over and walled in, we should have an interior capable of accommodating from four to five thousand worshippers, an amount of floor space likely to meet the needs of the cathedral for fifteen or twenty years to come. The interest now shown in the services held in the crypt warrants the belief that even so large an area as that indicated would be not at all too large. To carry out this plan would involve an expenditure of about $250,000 over and above the half million required for the completion of the choir, a total of $750,000."

The money just left by Mrs. King will go specifically to the building of one of the chapels connected with the apse of the cathedral. There are to be seven of these chapels, each of which will be dedicated to one of the world's great races; thus they will be known as the Chapel of the Oriental Rite, the Italian Rite, the Gallican Rite, the Mozarabic Rite, the Scandinavian Rite, the German Rite, and the British Rite. Of these the Chapel of the Italian Rite, known as the Belmont Chapel, has already been built. It is probable that each of these chapels, as in the case of the Belmont and what will be the King Chapel, will be erected as memorials, thus receiving separate and special endowments. In order to accelerate the building of the "crossing," so urgently desired for the present work of the cathedral, it is hoped that a similar method of endowment in regard to the arches may become practical. As there are three additional arches needed for this portion of the work, and as each arch will cost $80,000, it is expected that the arches, like the chapels, will be made the subjects for individual memorials. According to the architects, with the money now in hand the contracts for the building of the choir will be let this Summer. Work on the latter, it is expected, will be finished next year.

In the building of the great cathedrals of the past it has frequently happened that the kind of material used in the beginning has not lasted to the end of the work, owing to the great length of time that has sometimes elapsed and an unexpected shortage of the supply. It has thus been necessary occasionally to finish a cathedral in a stone of an altogether different character and appearance from that used at first. To avert this possibility in the case of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the cathedral corporation has leased sufficient land with stone adjoining its quarry back of Peekskill to insure a uniformity in the material used in the edifice, no matter how long the latter may be in building.

Although the cathedral system as a method of religious teaching and activity is sometimes criticised in the Church as a relic of a bygone time, interesting archæologically, but lacking in practical value, it is notable that the revival of this primitive form of church organization as contemplated in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in this city is being carefully watched by the leaders of the Church in England, where, in recent years, the two cathedrals of Edinburgh and Truro have been founded. Advocates of the system claim that the latter is particularly and admirably suited to meet the religious conditions of the present day, and that far from being an anachronism, the cathedral has as vital a place and work with us now as it ever had in the past. In England the cathedrals are the centres of the national history, intimately associated with all the turmoil and evolution of the past of the people and the government. In this country such an association of the Church and State is, of course, not possible; but it is not difficult to foresee that the rôle of such a remarkable work as the Cathedral of St. John the Divine from its ideal situation surrounded by and overlooking the metropolis of the New World, will be real and far reaching, impressing something of its own dignity and majesty on the city at its feet, and carrying onward, in its mute, immovable stone, for future generations to reach, some record of the struggle and growth that will mark, century by century, the progress of our modern civilization. CHRISTENING CUP IN GOLD.

FOR the baby born with a gold spoon in its mouth and which is to grow up to dine on gold dinner services, there is a christening cup of gold floating around New York just now. The cup, being valuable, is not made in the form of a handled mug, useful only for infancy, but like a regular tea or coffee cup with a saucer and spoon to match. The set was made in Paris upon the order of a grandee of Spain, and was intended as a gift at the christening of the infant son of one of Spain's highest officers. It is in Empire design, the cup in graceful lines with a standard and handle raised above the level of the cup at the top. This handle is in the design of a lion, supposedly the lion of Spain. The saucer and spoon agree with the style of the cup. For some reason the grandee, the high officer, or circumstances, fell out, and the presentation was never made. Now the cup has drifted to New York, in the hands of private people, and is waiting to be purchased for one of New York's millionaire babies for $400—a great bargain

Tommy's Explanation.

Little Tommy told his mother that he thought it too rainy for him to venture forth to school.

"But it will not be too rainy this afternoon for you to play ball, will it?" asked his mother.

"No, mother," replied little Tommy respectfully, "because you can always play better ball in the rain than in the sunshine."

"I don't see how, Tommy."

"Why," replied Tommy, "it's because when it is raining there is lots of mud and that makes it so slippery that you can slide on your stomach better."

A Contrast since the Erie was First put in Operation

WHEN the Erie Railroad was chartered in 1832, New York had only about half as many hundred thousand inhabitants as it now has millions, and the Chicago directory was confined to twelve families. Between these two, the greatest cities on the continent, the Erie now maintains unsurpassed passenger service, the outcome of nearly three-quarters of a century of experience in operation.

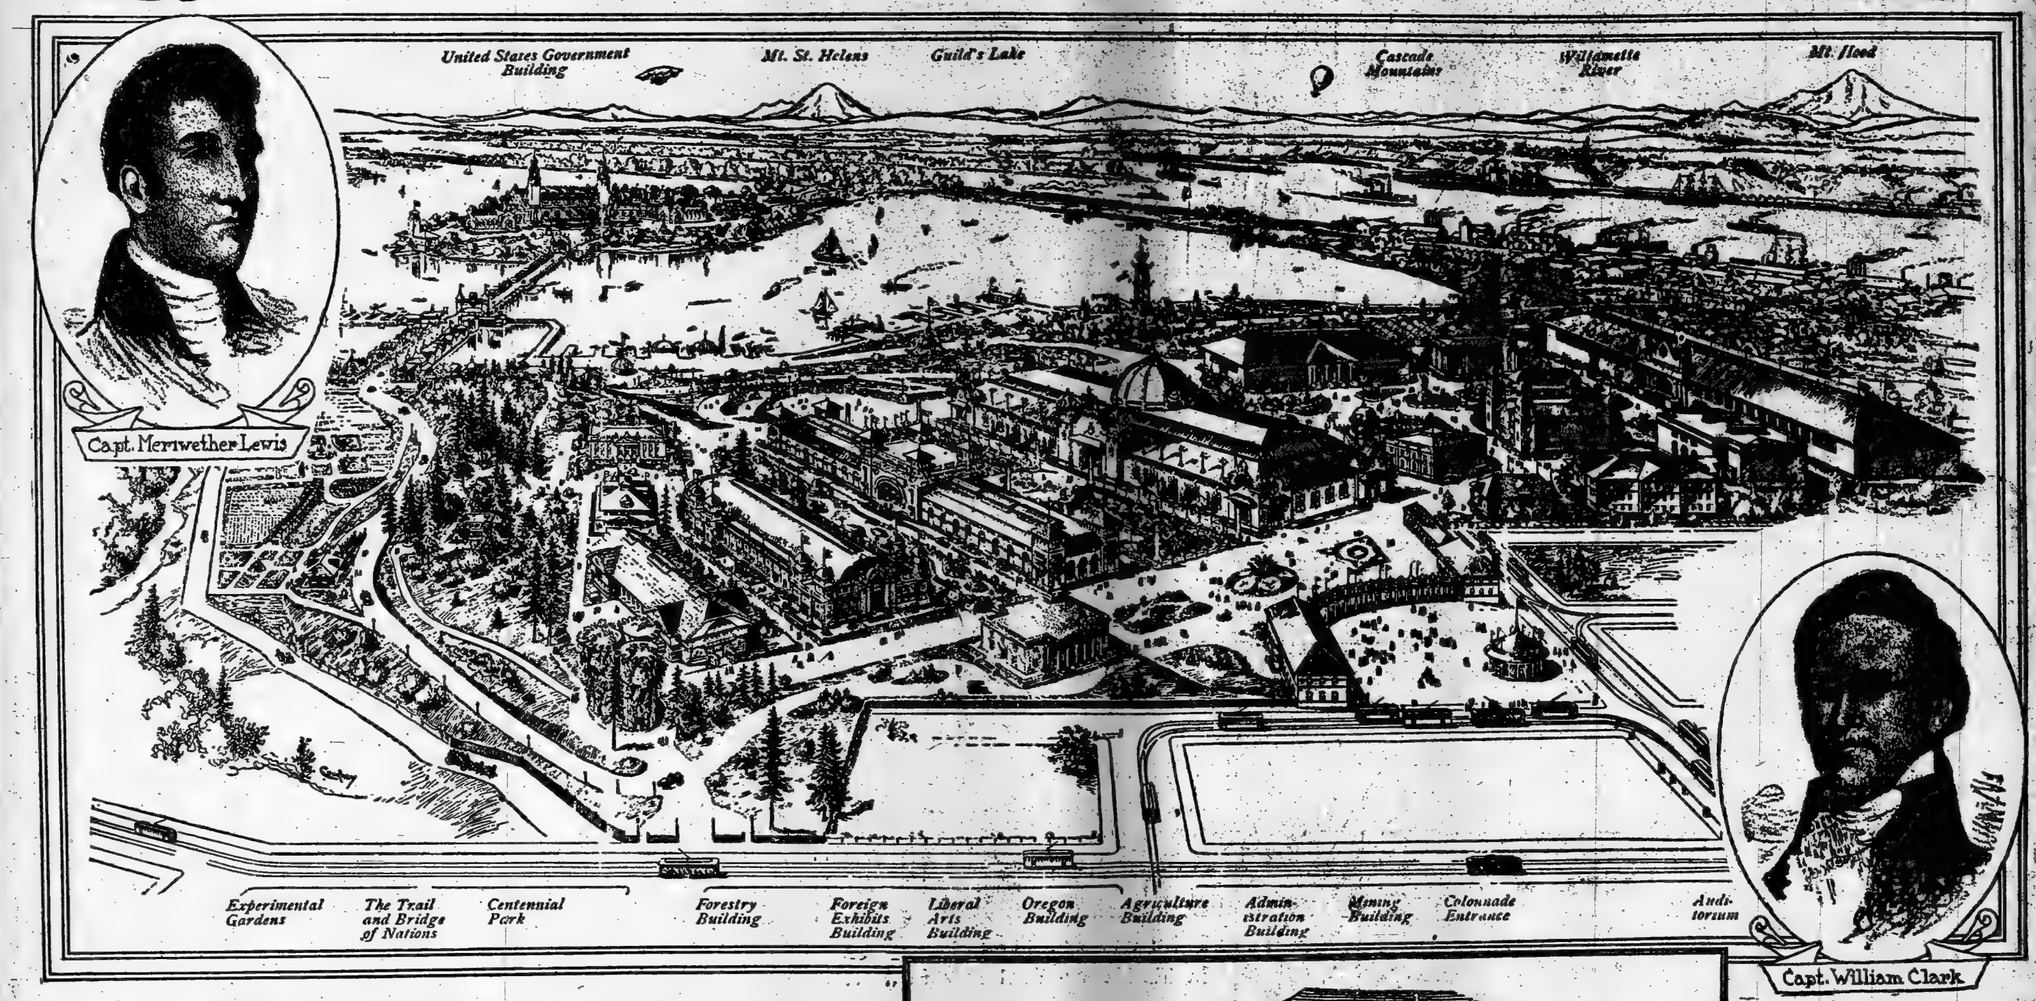
Portland's Big Fair Ready for the Signal



Lewis and Clark Exposition, Which Opens Thursday, Is Finished---Unusual Natural Attractions Which Have Been Utilized in Laying It Out---Some Unique Features---Why It Should Interest the Easterner.

THE LEWIS AND CLARK EXPOSITION at Portland will open next Thursday morning at 8 o'clock. At noon the President's signal, flashed from Washington, will set in motion the chimes in the towers of the United States Government Building, and the pealed strains of "America" will declare to the world that the Western World's Fair is formally opened.

The fair might have opened last week and been more nearly ready than other fairs have been on opening day, and when the gates are thrown open on Thursday there will be a sense of completeness about the enterprise which will gladden the hearts of the Oregonians who have stood by the project with money and good cheer, and who have very great hopes for its success.

The exposition takes its name from two hardy explorers, Capts. Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, who, with a little band of followers, pierced the wilderness a hundred years ago and discovered an overland route to the Pacific Ocean, thereby adding by right of discovery and exploration a territory of 307,000 square miles to the holdings of the United States on the American Continent. The event certainly is worthy of suitable commemoration by a centennial exposition and a fair worthy of the event. While smaller than the expositions held at Chicago and St. Louis, this exposition is by great odds the biggest thing ever attempted in the Pacific West, and there are many things about it which make it well worthy a transcontinental trip. Its world's aspect is secured by participation by many foreign countries, while State participation is extensive, and the United States Government has a display and buildings which represent an expenditure of $800,000. The fair has cost $5,000,000 so far, and its exhibit palaces contain displays worth five times as much.

On alighting from a street car one walks along a short street where the sandwich man, and the ice cream man, with the vendors of peanuts and fruit, clamor for nickels. At the entrance one encounters the familiar turnstiles, and within is the Administration Building, its window sills lined with telephones, and stenographers, who peer around at the crowd, without ceasing the monotonous clickety-click, which is wafted out upon the mild Spring air.

Connecting the Administration Building, which flanks the left, and the Fire Department, at the right, a stately colonnade, with balustraded parapet, bears the convincing legend, "Westward the Course of Empire Takes Its Way." It was intended originally that the entrance gates should be between pillars of this colonnade, but the fair outgrew the plans.

Beyond the colonnade the Exposition stretches out to the right and left and forward, but the principal buildings stand close together, like a six-horse team, facing a lake, which lies perhaps a quarter of a mile beyond the colonnade. A court, called Columbia Court, forms the central feature, corresponding to the wagon tongue, except that it is far more sightly, for the court contains two beautiful sunken gardens and some really creditable statuary. On either side of the court are the big buildings—European Exhibits, Oriental Exhibits, and Forestry to the left, and Agriculture, Varied Industries, and Mines and Metallurgy to the right. For outriders there are the Machinery, Electricity, and Transportation Building; the Auditorium, which seats 3,000 people; the Museum of Arts, several manufacturers' pavilions, half a dozen restaurants, the State Buildings of Oregon, Massachusetts, California, Washington, New York, Idaho, Utah, Colorado, Illinois, and Missouri; the pavilion of Coos County, Oregon; the Young Women's Christian Association Building, and several smaller structures.

These buildings are on the mainland. Guild's Lake, the exposition's surpassing water feature, which includes 220 acres, is crossed by a handsome bridge of staff and wood, built in imitation of solid masonry, nearly half a mile long. The Government buildings, five in number, occupy a peninsula which juts into the lake, and are accessible by way of the bridge, or by various water craft which ply the placid waters. Twin towers on the main structure, 260 feet high, pierce the sky line. The near end of the bridge is 200 feet wide, and is called the Trail; the far end, 50 feet wide, is called the Bridge of Nations. The Trail is the exposition's amusement street, and it promises to be a hummer. The gaudy, picturesque theatres and similar structures crowd one another on each side of a wide avenue and spread out at the land end, where they line the shore of the lake. A boardwalk over the water, called the Lake Shore Esplanade, starts in the extreme east of the grounds, and follows the lake shore, passing the band stand at the foot of the Grand Stairway which leads to Columbia Court, intersecting the Bridge of Nations at the place where the Trail ends, and ending finally at the American Inn, in the extreme western portion of the grounds.

Such, roughly, is the geography of the fair. The arrangement of the buildings, close together yet not crowded, is admirable, as it makes it possible to see the fair without the long weary miles of walking that will be remembered so vividly by the visitors to earlier expositions.

In making the fair a panorama of beautiful things, rather than a catalogue of things for sale and things that "every one ought to see," the managers willingly give Nature more than half the credit. Visitors at the Exposition will be inclined to credit the builders with rare good taste, and will see in the finished whole an exposition of wonderful attractiveness. There is about it an air of tranquil restfulness, which seems almost incongruous in a bustling Western city like Portland.

The main exhibits buildings cluster at the crest of a gentle slope which leads from the lake shore. Gravel walks intersect grass plots which separate the buildings, and on the hillside the vivid green of the grass contrasts delightfully with the pink and red and yellow of the flower beds, which lie like polka dots on the bosom of the slope. The tall towers of the main Government building are reflected pleasingly in the placid lake, while in the near distance lies the silvery Willamette, and half a hundred miles further four snow-capped mountains—Hood, Rainier, St. Helens, and Adams—pierce the sky. To the left—the east—the foothills of the Cascades, clothed in shrubbery with an occasional tall fir tree, reach down to the water's edge. In the western part of the grounds there are experimental gardens in a cañon which separates the grounds proper from the foothills, and on the slope leading to the cañon the natural woodland has been maintained, except that here and there a tree has been culled out in order to let a more beautiful tree flourish, and again attractive shrubbery has been planted in fitting places. This part of the site, which is called Centennial Park, is one of the most attractive features of the Fair, offering a glimpse of Oregon's natural woodland glories which is extremely fascinating. Gravel walks, with steps of logs at every slight ascent, cross and recross the shady recesses of the park, and numerous rustic benches offer rest to the weary.

Of the artificial features of the fair, the most noteworthy and wonderful is the Forestry Building, an immense structure of rough hewn forest giants, which covers half a city block, and is in itself an eloquent exponent of one of the chief wealth sources of the land which Lewis and Clark made part of Uncle Sam's domain. The building combines crude materials and architectural skill into a finished structure, which is strong, rugged, massive, and appropriate to the purpose for which it was built. Within the building are finished products of the forest, from the Oregon lumber mills, and in one end an extensive fisheries display, where the methods of hatching the famous chinook salmon are shown.

Within the spacious exhibits buildings the displays are in general such as have been seen at earlier fairs, but are more attractive, being more tastefully arranged. A policy of segregation adopted some time ago provides that all exhibits from Oriental nations shall be housed in one building and all European exhibits in another. Japan has more than half of the space in the Oriental Building. A continuation of the segregation policy gives States the privilege of showing their displays in their own buildings instead of scattering them among the different exhibits palaces, and in every case where a State has erected a building this has been done. Every Western State is represented generously, and the displays enable one to gain a clear idea of different sections of the Pacific Northwest without the expense of a visit to them. Nearly every county in Oregon, and many in Washington, California, and Idaho, likewise have displays, and one enterprising Oregon county, Coos, has built a large building, the materials for which are all from that county, which is especially rich in fine woods.

The new things to be seen here are for the most part Western things, and are especially interesting to Easterners, who will come to Oregon to see the staff city that is called an exposition, and the great Oregon country outdoors, which is in itself an exposition more glorious than any that man could build.

One of the purposes of this exposition is to attract settlers to a region that needs only development to make it the wealthiest in the United States. The people of Portland want to build up their city, and they are going to treat the visiting thousands in a manner that will prove that true hospitality is not confined to the South. They expect that many people will settle in the thriving Western metropolis, and that many more will locate in the vastly rich country tributary to Portland. The railroads have made rates which in no case exceed one fare for the round trip, and are doing everything in their power to bring the people West, and it is likely that thousands upon thousands will take advantage of the opportunity to see a part of the country which almost every American wants to see. Visitors will find Portland a most delightful place to spend a vacation, and within a few hours' journey they may enjoy sea bathing, or may view some of the grandest river, mountain, and farm scenery in the world.

The Exposition will be open until Oct. 15, every day. The gates will open at noon on Sundays.

Decoration Day in History.

Events of Importance, Whether in Peace or War, Which Have Fallen on May 30th Since De Soto Landed in Florida on That Day in 1539.

THE thirtieth day of May, which the forty-five States of the now indivisible Union have known as "Decoration Day" ever since Gen. Logan's order in 1868 officially set it aside for the observance of reminiscent patriotism, figures variously in had arrived in the world (May 22) fifty-six years earlier, Pope died of an asthma at his country home at Twickenham, where now dwells that journalist-parliamentarian Henry Labouchere. It was the end of a life made up of contradictions—a mighty intellect in a puny frame, a than Memorial Day, are closely connected with the war between the Northern States and the Southern. It was on May 30, 1850, that there was born a boy soon to be christened Frederick Dent Grant, and who was to grow up to the command of those same armies which his then unknown father was to lead to final victory in the greatest of all civil wars—to grow up, moreover, so like that world-famous father in every feature and movement as to cause many a veteran of the sixties to turn and look after him in the streets with a strange and sudden beating at the heart.

Twelve years later than this, (1862,) it was on May 30, that the Confederate forces evacuated Corinth, down near the Tennessee line in Mississippi, while the same date in 1854 had seen the signature of Franklin Pierce attached to that famous Kansas-Nebraska bill which played no inconsiderable part in bringing on an armed arbitrament of the slavery question. That stroke of the Chief Executive's pen organized as Territories the States which are now known as Kansas and Nebraska, the latter to join the Union in January of 1861 as a slave State, but Kansas not until 1867, when the portentous question which had drenched her fields with blood in the middle fifties had been settled beyond all further disputing. Far from least among the past events recalled by Memorial Day is the signing of that bill—it marked the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, it marked the triumph of that strong but scheming leader Stephan A. Douglas over such patriots as Sumner and Chase and Wade and Seward; it made of "squatter sovereignty" a bitter fact, encouraging those worse elements which brought war into the land.

The earliest of Memorial Day happenings, three centuries and a quarter before the holiday was first to be officially declared, was the landing in Florida, on that date in 1539, of that picturesque, pitiless adventurer Ferdinand de Soto. Cabot had touched the coast in 1497, Ponce de Leon had landed there on Easter Sunday, 1512, giving it the name which it now bears, but it was to be left for this Spanish "gentleman of Elvas" to conquer the land in the name of "Charles the Fifth and Christ"—and to establish there its first white colony. He was to spend there the wealth which he had illy won with Pizarro in Peru, and he was to lay down there the life whose sole passion was for gold.

Strangely enough, it was on the 30th of May again that de Soto first crossed the mighty Mississippi. A month earlier he had come upon it—"a mile broad, I should say, its strong and muddy current forcing a deep channel beneath it as it flows southward to the sea with its burden of ravished timbers"—and it had taken weeks to build boats capable of carrying over the horses of the expedition. This was in 1541; a year later, having explored the stream northward, Chevalier Ferdinand had been buried in its "strong and muddy current."

May 30 is also the death day of two of the most famous sons of the eighteenth century—of Alexander Pope, the winsome, witty poet, and of that satirical Voltaire, who was poet, too, but also philosopher and historian.

François Marie Arouet de Voltaire, who died thirty-four years after Pope, though on the same date, has come to be regarded as one of the enigmas of all time. Victor Hugo saw in him a poet, but also and to greater extent an apostle. Lord Brougham, on the other hand, scarce gave him credit for reasoning power; to him Voltaire was but a witty scoffer. Carlyle, writing from the studious quiet of Chelsea, branded him with a single line: "That withered Pontiff of Encyclopaedism." And night-capped little Cowper summed him up in the couplet:

Lived long, wrote much,
Laughed heartily—and died.

Each phrase of this touches a keynote. Voltaire was eighty-four when he dropped his favorite Juvenil, turned his thin face to the wall, and fell asleep for the last time. He had written so much that no other author has shown himself so versatile and few so productive. He had laughed heartily, indeed, though according to Canon Kingsley it was out of sheer self-defense from the arrant folly all about him—and he had died, he, too, on Memorial Day, 1778.

What memories the day must hold for those, now few, survivors of India's fearful sepoy mutiny of 1857-58. For it was on May 30, ten weeks after the outbreak had first appeared at Barrackpore, and much less than that since it had reached Meerut and Delhi, that the scourge spread its black terrors over ill-fated Lucknow. For seven weeks there had been indignant murmurings and threats heard through the town, but Henry Lawrence, "who has shown all other Christian gentlemen how to lay down life for duty," had checked its final bursting into outrage and bloodshed till the late afternoon of May 30.

Then came the deluge—with the mutineers in possession of all Oude, with the 700,000 inhabitants of the city aiding and abetting them, and with less than 1,000 white soldiers and scarce fifty English officers to protect the wives and children in the besieged Residency, the listening ears of the Scottish lassie were not to hear the far-off strains of the pipes playing "The Campbells Are Coming" for more than six long months. Relief was not to arrive until late November for that siege which opened on Memorial Day.

\+ + +

In South Africa, and to those who fought bravely but fruitlessly for the Transvaal Republic, May 30 stands for an event clearly foretelling the defeat of their loved cause. On that date, in 1900, "Oom Paul" Kruger started on his flight from Pretoria, the capital of a republic dying in its fifty-second year. He had come in from the front three months before; his Cabinet had met and sent forth to the world that plea for intervention which was to amount to less than the paper it was written on; the Volksraad had met and adjourned to no helpful purpose; Driefontein had been lost, Mafeking relieved, the Orange Free State annexed. These things had broken the patriarchal old man, and when the news came in of the death of Gen. Joubert, it is said that he gave up all hope, starting on to Waterval-Onderen in an official retreat which practically laid the fortunes upon the

ANOMALOUS LOAN INCREASE.

Liquidation in Stock Market Fails to Reduce Borrowings from Banks —Probable Explanation.

Since the middle of last April, when the stock market reached the highest level recently attained, the active railroad stocks on the average have fallen about ten points. During the course of this decline there was much necessitous liquidation and a good deal of selling by those who, though able to care for their holdings, were induced by the weakness of the market to withdraw from it entirely for the time being. Coincidently with the ten-point decline in the stock market the loans of the associated banks of New York City rose about $20,000,000. The latter fact seems to throw much doubt on the common assumption that liquidation in the stock market results normally in less demand upon the banks for accommodation and in decreased loans by the banks. A similar discrepancy between the course of the stock market and of the loans reported by the New York banks has been noticed on former occasion, but surely the entire failure of the bank loans to reflect the liquidation of speculatively held stocks was never more marked than it has been during the past few weeks. Just what have been the movements in loans in stock market prices since April 15 last are clearly shown in the following table, which gives the bank loans by weeks, the changes from the previous week, and the average prices of twenty railroad stocks, together with the average rate for call money:

	Bank Loans.	Change from Previous Week.	Average Price R. R. Stocks.	Average Call Money Rate.
April 15..	$1,099,611,100	+$8,851,500	126.28	2½
April 22..	1,107,294,900	+ 7,683,800	123.40	2½
April 29..	1,097,902,100	— 9,392,800	117.91	2
May 6...	1,092,121,900	— 5,780,200	118.35	2½
May 13..	1,099,716,900	+ 7,595,000	119.42	2½
May 20..	1,120,426,800	+20,709,900	116.33	2½
May 27..	1,111,008,400	— 9,423,400	117.50	2½
Net change		+11,392,800	— 8.78	—1

It will be seen that yesterday's bank statement partly corrected the previous anomalous movement although still leaving a large net increase in loans. The failure of loans to decrease as stocks are liquidated is frequently attributed to the fact that those who buy stocks that are sold by those whose margins have become exhausted, or who sell to stop their losses, are themselves forced to borrow from the banks in order to make their purchases. This doubtless is true, for it is beyond conception that those who buy from the speculators who are forced or frightened out of the market buy outright. The latter as well as the earlier purchasers usually carry their stocks on margin, but with this difference, that those who buy in a weak market generally protect their purchases by larger margins than those put up by the original purchasers. Thus the five-point margins are closed out to the ten-point margins, and these in turn are replaced by twenty-point margins. The assumption, of course, is more or less theoretical, but it accords well with the general experience in such matters. Thus in a liquidating market the loan requirements so far as the stock market is concerned decrease as the market declines, first on account of the larger margins possessed by the buyers, and secondly because of the decrease in the purchase price. To buy 100 shares of Pennsylvania at 140 with a five-point margin requires the borrowing of $13,500; to buy the same lot at 130 with a twenty-point margin requires the borrowing of only $11,000. Thus a ten-point decline in this stock and the substitution of a stronger for a weaker purchaser reduces the loan requirements at the rate of $2,500 for each hundred shares. It is of course problematical how much stock is carried on margin, and therefore what is the total reduction of loan requirements resulting from a ten-point decline in the stock market. If it is a safe assumption that, say, 10 per cent. of the active issues quoted on the Stock Exchange are carried on margin, then the reduction is very considerable. The forty most active issues represent an aggregate capitalization of $3,700,000,000. If the 10 per cent. assumption is correct, about $370,000,000 is the amount of these stocks carried on margin. Disregarding for the moment the question of incre

Dated April 1, 1905. Due January 1, 1931.

Without option of prior payment.

Interest April and October. Colonial Trust Co., New York, Trustee.

TAX EXEMPT IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The West Penn Railways Company owns and operates 95 miles of interurban electric lines of heavy steam railway construction, serving a population of over 200,000 in the well-known Connellsville coal and coke district adjacent to Pittsburg, through which territory it has a practical monopoly, owing to the broken character of the country.

Electric lighting is supplied in 34 communities, including five cities, with populations ranging from seven to twelve thousand. One hundred and forty thousand people are within immediate reach of this service.

The power for these operations comes from a main power station at Connellsville over high tension lines, utilizing six sub-stations. All buildings are of brick and the cost of this generating and distributing plant was over $1,200,000.

The group of capitalists, under whose direction this property was organized and constructed, includes some of the most active and successful business men in Pittsburg, the managers of the group being:

Mr. E. C. CONVERSE, Chairman of the Board of Directors. (Pres. Bankers' Trust Co. and Liberty National Bank, New York.)

Mr. W. S. KUHN, Pres. and Director. (Pres. United Coal Co. and Gen. Mgr. Am. Water Works, and Guarantee Co., Pittsburg.)

Mr. JAMES S. KUHN, Vice.-Pres. and Director. (Pres. Pittsburg Bank for Savings, Vice.-Pres. Trust Co. of America, New York.

THIS GROUP OF CAPITALISTS INVESTED OVER $2,500,000, IN CASH, IN THE PROPERTY, IN ADDITION TO THE PROCEEDS OF THE BONDS WE ARE NOW OFFERING.

The first year of operation shows a satisfactory surplus over fixed charges. The operating franchises of the West Penn Railways Company run for 999 years. Engineers' Report may be examined at our offices.

OFFICIAL REPORT

Of a Special Committee of the LEGISLATURE OF NEW YORK

Endorses the

Oppenheimer Treatment for Inebriates.

The following is a verbatim report made in May, 1905, of a Committee by the Legislature of New York.

"Your Committee appointed to investigate the question of the treatment of inebriates respectfully reports:

Various official reports of this State have for years recommended that some action be taken by this State in the matter of treatment of inebriates, for the reason that the present system has been found to be unscientific in its method, unsatisfactory in its results and involving great expense to the State.

In Re Criminal Inebriates.

The official report of the State Commission of Prisons for 1903 states:

'From statistics one would be fairly justified in estimating that one-half of the convictions in the criminal courts of this State are for the single offense of intoxication. The taxpayers of the State are annually subjected to large expense in the arrest and re-arrest of persons charged with this offense, and much of the time of our criminal courts is occupied in their trial, and about one-half of the expense of maintaining our jails and penitentiaries is caused by the maintenance of this class of offenders during their term of commitment. When a man is intoxicated his manhood is dethroned for the time being. It is often necessary for the protection of the public that he be taken into custody and receive treatment at the hands of the State. This offense (Drunkenness) should not be treated strictly as a crime. Drunkenness has in it no element of malice. The law should recognize this distinction. The present practice of sending him to jail or to the penitentiary to consort with thieves only degrades and discourages him and at the same time inflicts punishment and privation upon his family. Some wiser method of dealing with this offense should obtain.'

On the inequality of the present system in its operation on the rich and the poor, the report further says:

'The man of means pays a small fine and suffers no inconvenience, while the poor man, whether he pays his fine or goes to prison, brings privation to his family.'

So important was this subject deemed by the State Commission of Prisons that its formal recommendation was:

'Section 6. Revise existing laws relating to the treatment of drunkenness.'

In Re Pauper Inebriates.

Upon investigation of this subject from the standpoint of pauperism, the recommendation of the General Secretary of the 'Charity Organization of the City of New York,' 1904, published under the title, 'Principles of Relief,' further confirms the necessity for action as follows:

'There are many with whom alcoholism is essentially a disease and unfortunately very often an incurable disease. The unfortunate victim, whatever the circumstance under which the habit was forced upon him, may become an object of infinite pity in the end. The most important single step that could be taken for the eradication of the curse of intemperance would be the early recognition of the symptoms of habitual drunkenness and the sentence of every person who has reached this stage either to a hospital or to the custody of a competent probation officer until cured. The substitution of this plan for the present utterly useless and absurd fines and short sentences to jail or workhouse would be both humane and scientific. Relief of such cases always conditional on some definite and radical step towards the curing of the real evil.'

Pursuant to the above recommendation relative to 'criminal inebriates' and 'pauper inebriates,' the Committee have carefully considered the need of some action for the relief of these dependent and delinquent classes, and also various methods of treatment of persons suffering from alcoholism. Recognizing that many of these persons are suffering from disease, some form of medical treatment should be given. In the judgment of this Committee the best treatment therefore is that of the Oppenheimer Institute, as it is strongly endorsed and advocated by large numbers of physicians and business and professional men of high standing, national repute and unquestioned authority; the treatment itself being reported as prompt, effective and free from certain objections inherent in other systems. A further reason for the selection of this treatment is its especial adaptability to those classes specified by the State Commission of Prisons and the Charity Organization Society, on account of its simplicity of operation, no residence at an Institute being required; and also because of its easy administration in each city and county of the State.

Furthermore carefully compiled reports show that the Oppenheimer Institute has already treated with marked success a considerable number of this class of inebriates, many of them at the instance of court and probation officers, both in New York State and elsewhere.

Believing that some action should be taken for the purpose of making possible—

First, a more humane treatment of this class of unfortunates, now classified and treated as criminals; and,

Second, radical economies in the maintenance of the penal and charitable institutions of this State.

Your Committee would respectfully recommend the enactment into law of the following bill:

An Act to Provide for the Treatment of Inebriates.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

'Section 1. When any person shall be convicted a second time of intoxication or drunkenness and disorderly conduct in any court in this State, the committing magistrate or board may commit such person so convicted to jail or other penal or charitable institution in accordance with the law, as a punishment for such offense; or, the committing magistrate or board may at the time of making said order of commitment, make an alternative or additional order directing that upon the consent of such person so convicted and committed, such person be released from such penal or charitable institution upon parole in the custody of proper persons appointed by said magistrate or board, upon the condition that such person so convicted take the treatment for the cure of alcoholism as administered by the Oppenheimer Institute, a corporation existing under the Laws of the State of New York, or any other treatment approved by the State Commission of Prisons.' * * *

THE CAR FOR SERVICE

White value is possibly not so well known and recognized as White merit. By "value" we mean maximum return for every dollar invested in a White car.

The principal reason that we can give so much for $2,500, the Cleveland price of the White car, is the high efficiency of our manufacturing plant—the result of long experience, of careful designing, of large output and of perfect organization.

F. NORTON GODDARD DIES AT HIS COUNTRY HOME

Civic Leader a Victim of Brain Hemorrhage.

HIS REMARKABLE CAREER

Wealthy, He Moved to Tenement District and Took Up Cause of Poor —Stamped Out Policy.

LITCHFIELD, Conn., May 28.—F. Norton Goddard of New York died suddenly to-day at his country home here. An attack of brain hemorrhage following several weeks of rheumatism and nervous prostration was the cause of his death.

Capt. Goddard came to Litchfield with his family about three weeks ago, hoping that his health would be improved in the air of the hill country. He was able to walk about the house and yard yesterday. Last night, however, he was stricken suddenly and died at 9:30 o'clock this morning.

Immediately after his death his business partner, Wilmer Baldwin of New York, was notified and came to Litchfield by a special train. It was announced that the funeral arrangements would be made to-morrow.

Frederick Norton Godddard was born in New York City in 1861, so that at his death he was only forty-four years old. In him this city loses not only a useful citizen, but one of its most interesting and inspiring figures. Born into the possession of great wealth and reared in luxury, but with a wholesome interest in his fellow-beings, he was moved to leave his own class and settle among people of the humblest walks of life. And he did not go among them to study them, to use them, or to pity them. He lived with them as one of their own, sharing their cares and pleasures, sorrows and confidences.

The estate of Capt. Goddard's father was estimated as high as $12,000,000. Capt. Goddard inherited his estate jointly with his brother. He was a son of the late J. W. Goddard, a merchant of the old-fashioned type, who came to this city from a Connecticut farm in 1847 and used his little capital of $900 to start the firm which since became J. W. Goddard & Sons, and which still exists under that name at 100 Bleecker Street.

The earlier part of F. Norton Goddard's education was obtained in the Anthon Grammar School, from which he passed to Harvard, being graduated with the class of '82. Immediately afterward he joined his father in the business. It was not until after his father's death that he decided to go in search of men nearer to nature than his former friends.

To accomplish this purpose he rented a floor of a tenement at 327 East Thirty-third Street and went there to live with no other company than that of an old and trusted servant, who was to keep house for him. One of the first things he did was to join a little group of earnest men that soon was to become the nucleus of one of the most hope-inspiring organizations in this city.

The club first had a dozen members, all of them men who earned their bread working hard with their hands. One was employed on board a ferryboat, another was a bricklayer, a third a plasterer, and so on. They met near the house where Capt. Goddard had established his quarters, and their purpose was to improve themselves by studying the problem of how to improve the conditions of others. The newcomer from the outside heard of their meetings, asked leave to join, and became soon the head and heart of the little body. According to his own words at a much later period, Capt. Goddard did not go into the tenement district with any particular idea of doing good or helping other men.

His desire was to escape a life that had become irksome to him. The little club grew and took the name of the Civic Club, which it has retained ever since. From the start an important part of the self-imposed duties of its members was to render personal service as well as pecuniary aid to anybody needing it within the district they regarded as peculiarly their own, a district bordered by Fourth Avenue, Forty-second Street, the East River, and Twenty-third Street.

Out of that work grew the campaign against the policy game, which by degrees became all but the life work of Capt. Goddard. He was responsible for the formation of the Anti-Policy Society, in which such men as Herbert Parsons, Marcus Marks, the Rev. Dr. Thomas R. Slicer, and P. Tecumseh Sherman became interested. To the efforts of that society is due the fact that policy is almost extinct in this city.

It was an uphill fight for many years, but with the enactment of the anti-policy law of 1901 began a campaign which reached its triumphant climax in the arrest and conviction of the n[illegible]no for years had been the chief backer of the policy gamblers.

In November, 1901, Capt. Goddard achieved the victory of sending the so-called "Policy King," Al Adams, to State's prison.

A year after moving to the east side Capt. Goddard married Miss Alice S. Winthrop. His removal from the Thirty-third Street enement became a necessity. He moved to 273 Lexington Avenue, thus keeping within easy reach of the district in which he had chosen to do his lifework.

He then launched the East Side Republican Club, with headquarters at 217 East Thirty-fourth Street. In 1650 Capt. Goddard carried the primaries and became the leader of his party within the district. Five years later he resigned from the leadership, but not until he had revolutionized political methods within the district.

Capt. Goddard earned the enmity of Senator Platt by attacking Lemuel E. Quigg in a bitter manner. Despite this, Goddard won the Twentieth District against the forces then controlling it, and by the Fall of 1890 was in the saddle as district leader. From that time on the Republicans made inroads into the Democratic vote, and in the Low-Shepard campaign captured the Aldermanship of the Twentieth from the Democrats.

Capt. Goddard was interested in a great deal of legislation during the past two sessions of the Legislature, especially bills affecting persons convicted of policy playing. Capt. Goddard was able to induce Gov. Odell to give him an emergency message on many of his bills, most of which were introduced by Assemblyman Prentice.

At the Civic Club last night all were downcast. The club received the first information of the blow that had befallen it through the Rev. Dr. Slicer. Throughout the day little groups of well-known district figures stood either in the clubrooms or just outside discussing what to do. A meeting of the Civic Club will be held to-night to take action concerning the death of Capt. Goddard.

COLLISION OFF SANDY HOOK.

Steamer Kentucky Rams the Exeter City in the Fog.

The British steamship Exeter City, which sailed for Swansea on Saturday, returned to port yesterday with a hole fifteen feet square on her starboard quarter above the water line, due to a collision she had with the Scandinavian-American liner Kentucky about 5:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon. The collision occurred just outside Sandy Hook, and was due to the impenetrable fog that blanketed the water outside the Hook at the time. After the accident the Exeter City anchored. Both the steamships are freighters.

At the time of the collision the Exeter City was proceeding under reduced speed in the direction of the open sea, while the Kentucky was making for the Hook just as slowly. Suddenly Capt. Staal of the Kentucky, who was on the bridge, saw the big hull of the Exeter City loom up ahead. He immediately ordered his engines reversed at full speed, but it was too late, and a moment later the bow of the Danish ship crashed into the Exeter City.

When the Kentucky backed away Capt. Staal saw that a big hole had been made, and immediately came to a stop and asked Capt. King of the Exeter City if he needed any assistance. Capt. King replied that he did not, and the Kentucky, which was undamaged, proceeded nearer the Hook and anchored. Yesterday afternoon Capt. King absolutely refused to talk.

Capt. Staal, however, declared that he heard no signals from the Exeter City prior to the collision. He had a Sandy Hook pilot on board, and the pilot also said that he failed to hear any signals from the British ship. Capt. Staal added that he did not know whether the Exeter City was under way or not. The fog, he said, was the cause of all the trouble.

SHIP'S WIRELESS FIRE ALARM.

Old Dominion Liner Rushes Blazing to Port, Sending Ahead Appeals for Help.

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., May 28.—A fire is raging to-night in the forward lower hold of the Old Dominion Line steamer Hamilton, which raced into port at 4 o'clock this afternoon after a thrilling experience and with her crew exhausted. Agents of the line said late to-night that no further attempt to extinguish the flames would be made until to-morrow morning. The fire is in a cargo of cotton and tobacco in hogsheads.

The Hamilton is being used as an extra freight steamer, and left here at 4 o'clock this morning for New York with a large cargo. She was proceeding up the coast and was between Hog Island and Winter Quarter Lightship when smoke began to pour out of her forward hold.

The ship was immediately stopped and the crew set to work to extinguish the flames by filling the hold with steam. There was not much of a sea on, but a fog was forming, and Capt. Boaz decided to run for Norfolk.

With all speed the Hamilton made her way back to the Virginia capes, using her wireless telegraph to good advantage and notifying the local office of the fire. The tugs met the steamer down the river. On the return trip the Hamilton's crew worked heroically and got the fire partially under control, but it broke out again to-night. A volunteer crew relieved the steamer's crew when she arrived, and the Merritt Wrecking Company was asked to assist in fighting the fire.

"The origin of the fire is at present unknown," said Agent Crowell of the Dominion Line to-night, "but was probably spontaneous combustion. The damage done to the freight in the Hamilton cannot now be estimated; it may be $10,000 or it may be $50,000. I do not think the steamer is injured. The fire broke out again to-night, and if the hold does not get too hot, we will wait till morning to fill it with steam."

NEW TIFFANY JEWEL CLUE.

Stolen Diamonds Sought in Pittsburg, Where Many ex-Cutters Live.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 28.—The Pittsburg detective force was notified by the New York police last night of the offer of a reward of $10,000 for the arrest of the persons implicated in the Tiffany diamond robbery and the recovery of the gems. The entire detective force is now working on the case, under the personal direction of Superintendent Thomas A. McQuaide.

Pittsburg is one of the few cities in the country where diamond cutters are employed. Many broken-down men who were once experts in that line, find employment in the South Side glass factories, where they work on imitation diamonds and also on cut glass. Most of these men are Hollanders, and there is quite a colony of them here.

This afternoon Superintendent McQuaide visited the colony personally. He refused to give out any information regarding his visit, but darkly intimated that it had not been fruitless. He is working on the theory that the thief would send the stolen diamonds to a place like Pittsburg rather than take the risk of sending them across the ocean to be recut, or having the work done in New York.

BROTHERS PERISH IN THE MUD

Young Men Overcome in Rancocas Creek When Tide Rises.

Special to The New York Times.

CENTERTON, N. J., May 28.—Charles Gravatt, 17 years old, and Alfred Gravatt, 20 years old, brothers, were drowned in Rancocas Creek, near here, this afternoon. The young men left their home shortly before noon, and said they were going out for a walk. At low tide they waded out in Rancocas Creek in the mud. Neither could swim.

Noticing the tide rising, both started to return to the shore. They found themselves in a bad predicament. Each move carried them further into the mud until they had entirely disappeared.

Several men who from a distance had witnessed the plight of the victims went to their assistance, but it was too late. One of the bodies was recovered to-night.

The brothers were the sons of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Gravatt of Burlington County.

CITY OWNERSHIP FIGHT IN PHILADELPHIA NOW

Ordinance to Pave Way for Control of Lighting Plants.

BIG FUND TO FIGHT RING

Committees of Seventy and Nine at Loggerheads—Reformers Plan Honest Elections.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 28.—A fight for municipal ownership is to be waged by the City Party, which intends to extend its operations through the State. John C. Winston, Chairman of the Committee of Seventy, will go to Europe this week to study municipal ownership as illustrated in foreign cities, and will bring back a report on how it can best be attained here.

Common Councilman Wilson H. Brown, one of the leaders on the Mayor's side in the gas fight, will introduce in Councils an ordinance paving the way for the city to take control of the gas works, which it can do on Dec. 31, 1907, by the terms of the present lease.

This is but a branch of the scheme. A fight for municipal ownership of electric lighting will be started almost at once. John M. Mack has seen the Mayor and shown him how this can be done.

Awhile ago Mack attempted to get a lighting contract. George R. Sheldon and Pliny Fisk of New York were his backers. The United Gas people blocked his way and prevented Councils from granting the franchise. United Gas men control the Philadelphia Electric, although the gas company as a corporation does not.

The Committee of Seventy and the Committee of Nine will meet to-morrow at the Commonwealth Building to plan a campaign of solicitation for funds to fight the ring. The amount to be raised is $1,250,000. W. W. Justice made this proposition at the mass meeting on Friday, and pledged $6,800 himself. To-day Stuart R. Wood duplicated Mr. Justice's pledge.

The "War Fund" is the name given to this. It is purposed to use the money in organizing the opposition to the ring, in investigating fraudulent contracts, and in carrying the election. Letters indorsing the scheme and promising money have poured in on the committees, and it is not expected that there will be much difficulty in raising the amount required.

This week the people will be urged to use the same methods by which they won the gas lease victory in securing the confirmation of Potter and Acker. Meetings will be held in every ward in the city, at which the confirmation will be demanded.

Divisions, however, are beginning to appear in the ranks of the reformers. There is jealousy between the Committee of Seventy and the Committee of Nine. At the meeting to-morrow it is expected that an attempt will be made to shoulder the Committee of Nine out of the field. W. T. Tilden of that committee is privately accused of setting his cap for a political nomination. On the other hand, friends of the Committee of Nine are trying to get rid of the Committee of Seventy. It is said by reason of its large membership to contain a number of visionaries and impracticables.

The organization was at Atlantic City to-day considering its defeat on the gas lease, and trying to keep its spirits up. Mayor Weaver was getting his usual ovations, this time receiving one at church.

Boss Durham communed with David H. Lane and other strong supporters of his at Atlantic City, but if there was any rift in the clouds they failed to make known the fact. They did not seem to like the statement that Durham had counseled submission yesterday, and the organization side of the story was easier to obtain to-day.

According to the organization version, Durham wanted to keep up the fight, but the United Gas Improvement Company would not let him. Dolan, it seems, was thoroughly sick of the fight, and neither he nor any of the other United Gas people was willing to continue objects of popular opprobrium any longer.

The organization further holds that it was not defeated at all. It maintains that the scheme would have gone through the Councils despite the accessions of Councilmen to Weaver's ranks. It is true that Weaver had gained enough recruits to make impossible the passing of the lease over his veto, but the organization asserts that many of these Councilmen gave in their accessions merely to lull the Weaverites into false security, and would have gone back to the ring at the proper moment.

An overturn of the city's Congressional delegation is confidently promised now by the reformers. Col. Potter, the new Recorder of Public Safety, is expected to make the police understand that the elections under him will be honest. The police here are like policemen elsewhere—not box stuffers from choice, but willing to do whatever their chiefs require.

The first honest election seen in Philadelphia within the memory of this generation will be held here next November, when a county ticket will be elected. After that will come another honest election, at which the fight will be made on the Congressional delegation. Then will come the election for Mayor. Weaver and Potter will still be in office, or if not Potter some other supporter of Weaver's. The way that election goes will decide permanently whether Philadelphia is to have any more honest elections or not.

"MED. FAC." DISBANDED.

Harvard Senior, Arrested for Vandalism, Not to be Punished.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 28.—In consequence of the arrest of Benjamin Joy, the Harvard senior, while perpetrating one of the pieces of so-called vandalism for which the Med. Fac. has long been famous in Cambridge, that celebrated organization has disbanded.

At least The Harvard Crimson will in the morning publish a communication from the Faculty of the university announcing that fact, and further that because of this action on the part of the Med. Fac. no punishment will be inflicted by the university authorities on Joy.

BATTLE NEAR SHANGHAI?

Firing Heard There and Russian Ships May Have Been Attacked.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—A dispatch received here from Shanghai to-day says that heavy firing is plainly heard to the northward of Shanghai.

LONDON, Monday, May 29.—A dispatch from Shanghai says that Japanese warships arrived in the offing at Woo-Sung on Saturday and attacked the Russian ships, but a later dispatch says that the Russian transports are to stay in the vicinity of Shanghai, while the vessels of the Volunteer Fleet are to leave for either German or French territory.

It is reported that the Chinese authorities ordered the Russian vessels to leave Woo-Sung by 8 o'clock Saturday night or to haul down their flags. The Russians, one dispatch says, are temporizing.

It is reported from Hongkong that the British fleet is leaving for the north at full speed.

The Daily Telegraph's Tokio correspondent and The Daily Telegraph itself both discredit the rumor that the Japanese attacked the Russians at Woo-Sung, though the Shanghai correspondent of The Morning Post says that the firing of big guns was heard outside Woo-Sung last night. He adds that the Chinese warship Hai-Chi has cleared for action.

SINKING OF AMERICAN SHIP.

No Details Received — Russians Say Maybe It Was Necessary.

TOKIO, May 28.—The name and destination of the American steamer which Admiral Rojestvensky is reported to have sunk off Formosa about May 21 are unknown here.

Details concerning the sinking of the vessel will, it is expected, be made known when the crew of the steamer reaches Japan.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 28.—Nothing is known at the Admiralty of the reported sinking of an American steamer off Formosa. An official said to-day:

"Rojestvensky may have been compelled by military necessity to destroy a neutral. If he feared that to allow it to proceed and to report the whereabouts and direction of the Russian fleet would endanger his strategic plan he had no other alternative except to take off the crew and sink the ship.

"Such an incident is unfortunate, but every naval officer must admit that the risk in such a crisis is too great to take any chances. If the ship was unjustifiably sunk from the point of view of international law, Russia, of course, will have to foot the bill; but any cost is cheap if it furthered Rojestvensky's mission."

The written opinion of the Superior Admiralty Court in the case of the cotton found on the British steamer Calchas, captured by the Vladivostok squadron, is expected some time this week. There appears to be a division of opinion in the court, M. de Martens, on behalf of the Foreign Office, while agreeing that the cotton on board the Calchas was of a contraband nature, holds that the principle of conditional contraband for cotton should be enunciated, while the representatives of the Admiralty contend for the principle of absolute contraband.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Confirmation has been received here from Shanghai of the press report that Russian warships have sunk an unknown American merchant ship.

It is suspected that the Russian Admiral sank the vessel and took care of the crew as a measure of military necessity to protect himself from the disclosure of his whereabouts to the enemy.

If this proves to be the case, an interesting international question arises. There can be no doubt that Russia would be liable for the act of destruction and would be required by this Government to indemnify the owners. The case, however, would be a new one, as it is not an established principle that the property of a neutral may be wantonly destroyed to prevent communication of military movements to an enemy.

Another view of the incident is that the unlucky vessel failed to answer when hailed by the Russians. In this case she was clearly liable to receive a shot without parley or delay.

YOUNG ROEBLING'S ESCAPADE.

Boy Missing for a Week Preferred Hardships to School.

Special to The New York Times.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., May 28.—Young Siegfried Roebling, who had been missing from his home for more than a week, and who turned up in Knoxville yesterday, returned here to-day of his own accord, having learned of the anxiety his absence had caused his father and mother.

"I just meant to go away until school was over," he said, "and then I was coming back."

Siegfried is willing to endure almost any hardships rather than go to school. He had tramped the greater part of the distance to Knoxville, 160 miles away, and had ridden on freight trains the rest of the distance. He had slept out in the mountains, in schoolhouses, and in churches, living for days on a few loaves of bread. He pawned his watch at Knoxville, and when his money gave out obtained a job as messenger boy at $2 per week.

ROPE SKIPPING FATAL.

Little Girl Taken Ill After Winning Contest—Soon Died.

Six-year-old Madeline Russell of 130 North Tenth Street, Brooklyn, last night engaged in a rope skipping contest with some other girls on the sidewalk in front of her home. She had been at it for two hours, and had outskipped all the other children, when suddenly she complained of feeling ill. She managed to cross the street and walk up the stairs to her home. When she reached the room where her mother was she fell to the floor, and half an hour later she died.

The children in the neighborhood last night began to take up a collection for flowers to place on the grave of their playmate.

FIGHT BEGAN SATURDAY

Between 2 and 3 o'Clock in Afternoon Fog Lifted and Togo Found His Foe.

TOKIO, May 29, 2:15 P. M.—It is officially announced that Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet has been practically annihilated. Twelve warships have been sunk or captured, and two transports and two torpedo boat-destroyers have been sunk.

LONDON, Monday, May 29.—5 A. M.—The correspondent of The Morning Post at Shanghai says a telegram has been received there from Peking announcing that Rojestvensky's fleet has been defeated off the Tsu Islands and is fleeing northward, and that four Russian ships, including the battleship Borodino, have been sunk.

A Tokio dispatch to The Daily Mail says that the Russian fleet has been dispersed, that several Russian ships have been disabled, and that the remainder are in flight, with the Japanese pursuing.

According to The Daily Telegraph, a private telegram was received in London last night in a very high quarter to the effect that Admiral Togo had gained a great victory.

TSING-TAU, May 29.—There is a running naval engagement between the Russian and Japanese fleets in the Strait of Korea, near the Island of Oki, (in the Sea of Japan, about 200 miles northeast of the Strait of Korea.

It is reported that the whole Russian fleet is not participating, all the slower vessels having steamed around Japan.

The Japanese losses so far are stated to be one cruiser and ten torpedo-boats.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The State Department this morning received the following telegram from Charles E. Harris, Consul at Nagasaki:

"Nagasaki, May 28: Japanese sunk the Russian battleship Borodino and four more warships and a repair ship."

The State Department also received the following dispatch from Tokio:

"Tokio, May 27: Japanese fleet engaged the Baltic Squadron this afternoon in the Strait of Tsushima, which was held. Cannonading heard from shore."

From other information received here to-day it is believed that the Russian battleship Orel was sunk as well as her sister ship the Borodino, and that three Russian cruisers were destroyed.

The Japanese Minister, Mr. Takahira, to-night received a dispatch from Tokio saying in effect that the naval battle thus far had been with favorable prospects to the Japanese. The Minister's dispatch was from private sources.

Late to-night a telegram came from Minister Griscom at Tokio stating that a dispatch from Admiral Togo to the Japanese Government reported a fight with the Russian fleet, and that the Japanese held the Strait of Korea.

The belief in naval circles is that the Japanese resorted to free use of torpedo boats in their attacks on Rojestvensky's fleet. The Japanese have a large number of torpedo boats and they demonstrated their effectiveness in the operations at Port Arthur. Naval officials here say it is unlikely that such serious losses as those reported could have been inflicted by ordinary fire.

Embargo on News in Tokio.

TOKIO, May 28, 7:45 P. M.—The embargo on the publication of naval news continues. Absolutely no information concerning the operations of the Japanese and Russian fleets was obtainable here to-day.

Newspapers are held under an absolute leash and all telegraph and cable lines are closed to press dispatches.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, May 29.—The St. Petersburg Telegraph Agency publishes the following from Shanghai under date of May 28:

"From all quarters telegrams are arriving here announcing that a naval battle is in progress between Tsushima Strait and the Japanese coast. No details are given, but the tone of telegrams from Che-Foo is favorable to the Russians. The telegrams say that the Vladivostok squadron participated in the engagement.

"An English firm in Shanghai has received a telegram from Tokio to the effect that the Japanese have been victorious, but nobody here believes it.

"There is the greatest excitement in Shanghai. All the warships in the harbor have cleared for action.

"The cable to Woo-Sung has been interrupted since yesterday, but the cause is not known.

"Numerous merchantmen have postponed their departure pending the receipt of further news."

A dispatch to a news agency from Che-Foo says private advices have been received by the Japanese Consul there, stating that the main portion of the Russian Baltic Fleet engaged the Japanese squadron in the Strait of Korea last night.

PARIS, May 28.—The Temps reproduces a dispatch from Rome saying that the Italian Minister of Marine, Admiral Mirabello, has received a telegram from Che-Foo giving a rumor that a battle of the most violent character has been fought, in which both sides suffered serious loss.

The Echo de Paris's St. Petersburg correspondent says that in a letter which Admiral Rojestvensky wrote six weeks ago, he said he desired to reach Vladivostok without a combat if possible, but he would do nothing to avoid an encounter.

Battle Began Saturday.

CHE-FOO, May 28.—Private telegrams from Korea to the Japanese Consul here state that a battle was progressing yesterday afternoon in or near the Korean Strait between the main portion of the Russian squadron and the Japanese fleet under command of Admiral Togo.

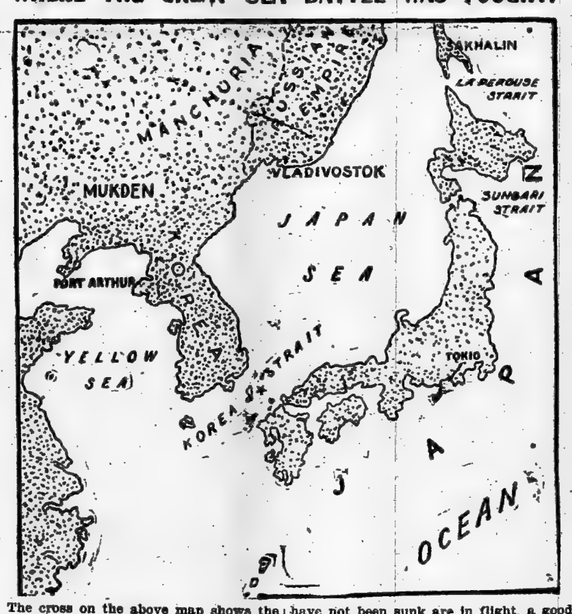
Other telegrams almost identical with the foregoing have been received.

According to the best information received here recently the main portion of Admiral Togo's fleet has been almost constantly at Ma-sam-Pho Bay, Korea.

Advices from a reliable quarter are to the effect that three Russian battleships, three armored cruisers, and several colliers were off Shanghai on Friday. It is believed that Rojestvensky sent sufficient ships to the vicinity of Shanghai to induce the belief that his main fleet was there, while the major portion of it pushed on toward the Korean Strait.

Several Russian colliers were at Shanghai at 9 o'clock last night. Private telegrams received here from Shanghai say that as fast as the cargoes of the colliers were consumed the vessels were dismissed by Rojestvensky and started back for Europe.

WHERE THE GREAT SEA BATTLE WAS FOUGHT.



The cross on the above map shows the spot where the battle between the fleets under Rojestvensky and Togo began. The latest dispatches indicate that Togo's base had for some time been at Ma-sam-Pho, on the coast of Korea, whence it was easy for him to intercept the Russians.

If it is true that the Russian ships which have not been sunk are in flight, a good many of them will probably make for neutral ports, such as Che-Foo, opposite Port Arthur, and Kiao-Chow, the German port on the Shan-Tung Peninsula. If they do this they will have to be interned, and the effect, so far as the present war is concerned, will be the same as if the Japanese had sunk them.

HIGH SEA DURING BATTLE.

Russians Entered the Strait in a Fog, Which Later Cleared.

TOKIO, May 28.—Telegrams, apparently trustworthy, show that Admiral Rojestvensky drew up in Tsushima Strait yesterday morning during a fog, which cleared in the afternoon, when the Russians were sighted by the Japanese.

A battle commenced between 2 and 3 P. M. A strong breeze was blowing, and there was a high sea.

No official news is published.

By The Associated Press.

LONDON, Monday, May 29.—The Daily Telegraph's Tokio correspondent says a dense fog prevailed in the Sea of Japan on Saturday. It occasionally lifted, when there was brilliant sunshine. A high wind prevailed, with a rough sea.

The Russian ships were first sighted at 6 o'clock in the morning approaching Tsu Island under cover of the fog, which, however, lifted, and the squadron retired. This squadron is believed to have consisted of six first-class ships, and, according to information received, twenty-one more Russian warships were not far away.

Nothing definite is known, however, says the correspondent, and the authorities merely reported that cannonading was proceeding.

It has now been discovered, the correspondent continues, that Rojestvensky's ships coaled along the coast of the Island of Luzon on May 22, and that on the following day they cruised about north of Luzon and transferred large quantities of bunker coal from colliers. Then Rojestvensky decided to divide his fleet into several parts. He traversed the Bashee Straits and steamed in a northeasterly direction. On the morning of May 25 the Russians were southwest of the Loo-Choo Islands, and the slow converted cruisers and transports were sent to Shanghai, while the main squadron went to Tsu Island.

The indications from many of the dispatches printed here are that Rojestvensky sent some of his vessels through Tsugaru Strait with a view to mystifying the Japanese.

A dispatch to a news agency says that two Russian warships were sighted yesterday afternoon at Masuki, (Mashike?) Hokkaido, steaming southwest, but it is unknown whether they belonged to Rojestvensky or if they were from Vladivostok.

RUSSIANS' JOY REVERSED.

People Now Pessimistic—Have to Depend on Tokio for News.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 28.—People here are unaware of the reported momentous happenings in the Strait of Tsushima. The Government offices and newspaper offices are closed and the majority of the population are enjoying themselves out of town.

Foreign telegrams are the sole source of news. These are so conflicting that it is impossible to ascertain what happened.

Inquiry at the Admiralty fails to dispel the confusion. Admiral Avellan declares that he has received no information concerning either Rojestvensky's squadron or Jessen's division.

It seems pretty [illegible]

MAY 29 1905

Admiralty was surprised to learn that Rojestvensky was off Tsushima, as it was believed that he firmly intended to attempt to pass eastward of Japan. The decision in favor of the Tsushima passage was therefore taken at the last moment, presumably in the hope of giving Togo the slip.

By The Associated Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, May 29.—In this momentous hour the Emperor, the Admiralty, and the Russian public are waiting breathlessly for the Japanese to furnish authentic news of the fate of Vice Admiral Rojestvensky and his fleet, in which the hopes of the Russians are centred. The official disposition is to construe Tokio's silence favorably, but at the same time the strategic reason for such silence is recognized.

The public, after the premature jubilation of Saturday night, is inclined to reverse its attitude and to become pessimistic.

The report sent to Washington by the American Consul at Nagasaki of the sinking of five Russian warships, including a battleship and a repair ship, was accepted as the most definite and authentic piece of news received up to midnight, and undoubtedly produced a bad impression. The fear was expressed that the battleship sunk might have been Rojestvensky's flagship, the Kniaz Souvaroff, on which the Japanese undoubtedly concentrated their fire. The sinking of the repair ship Kamchatka, which was filled with the most modern machinery, might, it was thought, prove later to be a more severe loss than that of a warship.

At the Admiralty, where crowds congregated yesterday afternoon and evening, the opinion was expressed that if Rojestvensky had cleared the gateway to the Sea of Japan with no greater loss than that reported by the American Consul, the passage had not been dearly purchased, especially if later reports should prove that the Japanese losses were in anything like equal proportion.

Czar Intensely Anxious.

Probably no one in Russia displayed such intense anxiety as the Emperor. Early yesterday morning he summoned the Grand Duke Alexis, the High Admiral; Admiral Avellan, head of the Admiralty Department, and Admiral Wirenius, Chief of the General Staff of the Navy, to Tsarskoe-Selo, and remained closeted with them up to a late hour at night, impatiently awaiting information and poring over charts.

The only news received by his Majesty from Russian sources was dispatches from Russian agents and Consuls at Chinese ports, who could give nothing but current rumors. The only time the Emperor left the members of his Cabinet was to attend service in the chapel of the Alexandra Palace, where the chaplain prayed for Rojestvensky's success.

The Emperor was greatly distressed when the Washington dispatch containing the information sent by the Consul at Nagasaki arrived.

The newspaper dispatches naturally created the wildest speculation. Some of the officers of the Admiralty who on Saturday night were inclined to take the view that the ships off Woo-Sung were empty colliers sent to the rear, or a division of little fighting value dispatched to throw Togo off the scent, thought yesterday that it was possible Rojestvensky had, after all, divided his fleet, and that the Japanese were awaiting the arrival of the Second Russia Division before making a general announcement.

The majority of the naval authorities, however, continue to believe that Rojestvensky could not risk a division of his fighting ships. Those of an optimistic turn hope that Rojestvensky did actually throw Togo off the trail and escaped him, as the French fleet eluded Nelson on the way to Egypt, encountering only torpedo boats in the Strait of Korea. This opinion, though, is not generally shared, and the great majority think that Togo's scouts were able to keep in touch with the fighting division, and that the Japanese fleet lay in wait for Rojestvensky in the narrow waters where a battle is reported to have been fought.

Suppose Togo Used Torpedoes.

Nevertheless, practically nobody believes that Togo offered open battle, the consensus of opinion being that the Japanese, favored by the moon, which was at three-quarters full, waited and delivered a series of torpedo attacks on Saturday night with such aid as their heavy ships could offer without running too much risk. Mines may have played an important rôle and were perhaps responsible for a large share of the losses reported.

It is possible that there was a running fight at long range yesterday, from which better results are anticipated, as the naval authorities generally do not believe that torpedoing could be renewed last night in the open sea.

The cruisers Gromoboi and Rossia of the Vladivostok squadron have probably sailed south to afford Rojestvensky any assistance in their power. If Rojestvensky got clear of the Straits last night he should be close enough to Vladivostok to-day to communicate.

No light has been thrown on the identity of the four cruisers reported from Tokio as passing the Kurile Straits, and the only explanation is that possibly another division of converted cruisers was detached for the purpose of confusing the Japanese.

At 1 o'clock this morning Admirals Avellan and Wirenius returned from Tsarskoe-Selo, and the latest dispatches to The Associated Press were shown to them. Admiral Avellan said:

"Practically all the information in the possession of the Emperor and the Admiralty is contained in The Associated Press dispatches. Like the general public we are now dependent on Tokio for news, but we hope to be able to relieve the general suspense by dispatches containing authentic information from Vladivostock by this evening."

FINE BATTLESHIPS SUNK.

Orel and Borodino Two of the Best in the Czar's Fleet.

The Orel and the Borodino, reported to have been sunk in the battle between Rojestvensky and Togo, were two of the finest vessels of the Russian navy, which contained four ships known as battleships of the Orel type. The others are the Souvaroff and the Imperator Alexander III.

All these vessels are absolutely new, having been completed late last year. Each is of 13,516 tons' displacement, is heavily armed, and well protected, and is designed to make eighteen knots an hour. They measure 397 feet by 76 feet, with 26 feet draught, and each has a lofty spar deck fully thirty feet above the water line, extending from the bow to the quarterdeck.

Forward on each vessel is mounted a pair of twelve-inch guns in a turret protected by eleven inches of Krupp armor. Another pair of guns of the same size is mounted aft. There are thirty other guns of the intermediate battery, and each vessel has two submerged torpedo tubes and two above water.

A special feature of the vessels is their bulkheads of armor, running throughout the whole length of the ship and designed to localize the effect of a blow from a torpedo.

THE VICTORIOUS ADMIRAL.

Togo, Japan's Nelson, Obtained His Naval Training in England.

When foreign experts, and even the Japanese themselves, discuss the victories won on land by the Mikado's forces they frequently assert that it is a mistake to give the chief credit to the Marquis Oyama; that as a matter of fact he is but a figurehead, and that the real work is done by Gen. Kodama and by the strategists at Tokio.

In a sea battle, however, there can be no question of divided credit or divided responsibility. The historic attack of Feb. 8, 1904, was Togo's work; the tactics which sent the Petropavlovsk to her doom were Togo's; to Togo's ability was due the great naval victory of last August, and to Togo must be ascribed Japan's latest victory on the sea. And so he is already called "Japan's Nelson."

Since the war began much has been written about Heihachiro Togo, and yet the sum of what is known about him is curiously little. It is known that he is about fifty-five years old; that he is a Samurai, but not of princely birth; that he was one of the first Japanese naval cadets to be sent abroad to study; that he served on the training ship Worcester on the Thames, and that later, like other Japanese officers, he was allowed to study at the Royal Naval College at Greenwich.

Returning to Japan, he was employed in various capacities. In 1894, when war began between China and Japan, he was in command of the Naniwa, a cruiser of 3,600 tons, one of the vessels composing what was then known as the First Flying Squadron of the Japanese Navy. During the war he greatly distinguished himself, and earned the reputation of being a first-class fighting man. He was present at the first battle of Phungdo, and at the battle of Haiyang, took part in the bombardment of Tangchow, and saw the final overthrow and destruction at Wei-Hai-Wei of all that was left of the Chinese fleet. Nor did his ship, the Naniwa, pass entirely scatheless through these ordeals, though she received no vital damage.

After the war with China he was raised to the rank of Rear Admiral and promoted to the third command in the Japanese fleet. Prior to his present appointment he was Commander in Chief at Maizuru, a dockyard on the Sea of Japan. His present rank is that of Vice Admiral.

In person Admiral Togo is a short, somewhat stout man, with full black beard and mustache, and a distinctly Japanese appearance. He is not a great talker; indeed, in manner he is somewhat reserved. Above all, he is a resolute, determined, very courageous sailor, quick and alert of perception, but calm and unprecipitate in action. He knows his fleet well—knows what it can do to a nicety, and he knows the spirit and temper of his men.

After the blockade of Port Arthur was over Togo went to Japan, where the Emperor thanked him, the people cheered him, and the Admiralty discussed with him what should be done to beat Rojestvensky.

RUSSIANS PRAY FOR VICTORY.

Services in the Cathedral Here—Doubt Report of Defeat.

The report that the Russian fleet had been defeated was received with skepticism by Russians in this city yesterday. The general impression was that the news, coming from Japanese sources, was to be taken with a grain of salt, and that Admiral Rojestvensky had lain his plans for the dash to Vladivostok far too well to fall into a Japanese trap.

With the knowledge that a sea fight between the Russian fleet and Admiral Togo's squadron was impending the morning service in the Russian Cathedral of St. Nicholas, in East Ninety-seventh Street, practically resolved itself into the saying of masses and the recital of prayers for victory before the ikon of St. Nicholas, who, in addition to being the Patron Saint of all Russia also is believed to extend in particular his protecting care to the navy and sea faring folk in general. There was no service at night.

At 217 East Broadway, headquarters of the "Bund," the American branch of the Russian terrorists, the report of the sinking of Rojestvensky's ship was received with every indication of satisfaction, but not with anything like the delight which the news of the events of "Bloody Sunday" in St. Petersburg gave rise to.

The newly founded Zhimotar Society, which was organized for the purpose of procuring funds to arm the Russian revolutionists, gave a ball at Apollo Hall, 128 Clinton Street. There upon receipt of the news the dancing was stopped long enough to allow the company to give a round of cheers for Russian freedom.

EXTREME ANXIETY IN PARIS.

Temps Pays Tribute to Rojestvensky's Skill and Audacity.

PARIS, May 28.—Intense interest has been aroused here by the news that a battle has been fought between the Russian and Japanese fleets.

Official and diplomatic quarters are without advices. The press dispatches are prominently displayed in the evening editions of the newspapers and are eagerly commented on.

All the newspapers display extreme anxiety over the result.

The Temps pays a glowing tribute to Admiral Rojestvensky's skill in preparing his squadrons for the final encounter and to his audacity in taking the route where the Japanese were strongest.

RUSSIAN SHIPS COLLIDED.

One of Rojestvensky's Vessels, Badly Damaged, at Kiao-Chow.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES. Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

PARIS, May 28.—According to a private telegram from Che-Foo, one of Admiral Rojestvensky's ships returned to Kiao-Chow (the German port in Shan-Tung) on Friday.

She had been badly damaged by collision with another ship.

RUSSIAN SHIPS' LONG VOYAGE TO BATTLE

It Was at First Thought Their Departure Was a Feint.

A HETEROGENEOUS SQUADRON

Weakness Also Believed to Have Been Due to Inexperienced Crews—More Big Guns Than Japanese.

The fleet under the command of Vice Admiral Rojestvensky, known as the Russian Second Pacific Squadron, sailed from the Baltic last October after various delays which had caused some European critics to assert that the vessels would never start and that the Russian Admiralty never intended that they should start.

The voyage had hardly been begun when an incident occurred which astonished the entire world and nearly led to war between Russia and Great Britain. In the North Sea, at the point known as the Dogger Bank, the Russian vessels encountered the Gamecock fishing fleet from Hull, England. The Russian Admiral mistook some of the trawlers for torpedo boats and ordered his vessels to fire. One fishing boat was sunk and two men were killed, others being badly wounded.

For some days the excitement in England was intense, and British official documents published later on showed that the two countries were on the point of war, but the crisis was ended by an agreement to refer the incident to an international naval tribunal. This Board of Inquiry met in Paris and, after a long investigation, reported that the Russian contention that hostile torpedo boats were present when the firing took place was not justified. Rojestvensky, however, was acquitted of the charge of conduct unbecoming a sailor, and the incident was ultimately closed by the payment of a large money indemnity by Russia.

The Dogger Bank affair caused some delay to the Russian ships, though not nearly as much as Englishmen expected. After leaving the Straits of Gibraltar the fleet divided, one division, under Admiral Rojestvensky, proceeding by way of the Cape of Good Hope, and the other, under Admiral Voelkersam, going via the Suez Canal. Rojestvensky had with him most of the battleships, and Voelkersam the majority of the cruisers.

Both squadrons proceeded very slowly, and the reports from time to time regarding their whereabouts were of the most puzzling character. On Jan. 1, however, Rojestvensky reached Madagascar, and there he awaited the cruiser squadron. At what time the two squadrons effected a junction has not been definitely stated, but it is certain that long after the fleet was assembled it remained in the immediate vicinity of Madagascar, engaging in gun practice and manoeuvres.

France asserts that the Russian ships did not remain in the colonial territorial waters, but Rojestvensky's vessels were undoubtedly close to the island of Nossi Bé, off the north coast of Madagascar. The long time spent there led to renewed assertions that the Admiralty at St. Petersburg would never order the fleet to the Far East. In the middle of March, however, reports were printed that the Russians had sailed. These reports were denied, and then repeated, and at length it was definitely established that the Baltic Fleet had sailed.

Entered China Sea April 8.

Nothing more was heard of it till April 8, when the news came that the fleet had passed Singapore and was in the China Sea. Again the reports were contradictory, some being to the effect that Rojestvensky's entire squadron had passed through the Malacca Straits, while others said that the principal battleships were missing. It seems that the battleships passed further out at sea than the rest of the squadron and were not seen from the shore.

In the meantime the reinforcing Russian division under Admiral Nebogatoff had sailed from the Baltic. This consisted of the battleship Imperator Nikolai I., the armored cruiser Vladimir Monomakh, the coast defense ships Admiral Apraxine, Admiral Oushkoff, and Admiral Seniavin, and a number of other comparatively unimportant vessels.

After entering the China Sea Rojestvensky spent a great deal of time at various points on the coast of French Indo-China, and the Japanese, who had been irritated by the breaches of neutrality of which the French had previously been accused, became greatly excited over what was declared to be France's open defiance of her neutral obligations in her Indo-Chinese colony. Twice, it is known, the relations between France and Japan were greatly strained, but at length Rojestvensky quit Indo-China for good and sailed north.

In the meantime, however, Nebogatoff had been able to catch up with Rojestvensky, and both divisions of the fleet had coaled and provisioned, an immense number of colliers having awaited them in Indo-Chinese harbors.

Surprise was caused among some naval men because Admiral Togo had not chosen to engage Rojestvensky before the Russians were strengthened by the addition of Nebogatoff's squadron, but leading European and American experts declared that Togo's course was the best under the circumstances. It was evidently the Japanese commander's plan to fight as near home as possible, so that in the event of any of his ships being damaged they would not have to go far for assistance. It was also pointed out that the extremely heterogeneous character of the combined Russian fleet was in some respects an additional danger to it.

Paper Strength of Fleets.

On paper the strength of the combined Russian divisions was about equal to that of the Japanese fleet. The most useful criterion of the strength of the naval squadron is its weight of broadside fire, and, though various elements which can hardly be incorporated in a table go to modify any figures that can be presented, the following may be regarded as approximately accurate:

Calibre of Guns	Number of Guns.—Russian.	Japanese.
12-inch	26	23
10-inch	7	8
9-inch	12	4
8-inch	18	34
6-inch	147	196

The Russians, therefore had 58 guns of higher calibre than 6 inches and the Japanese 64, while the Japanese had a considerable superiority in smaller guns. But against this must be put the fact that in a modern sea fight the 12-inch and 10-inch guns are much more valuable than any other class, so much so that the British Admiralty has recently been harshly criticised for not modifying its programme by replacing the proposed 8-inch and 6-inch guns on new warships by fewer guns of greater calibre.

It was on the homogeneous nature of the Japanese fleet and on the difference in the character of the personnel of the opposing forces that naval critics based their predictions of victory for Admiral Togo. The London Standard, for instance, said:

"The Baltic fleet may have more fighting capacity than most of its critics believe, or its previous record suggests. No doubt its officers and men will fight bravely, as the Russians have fought throughout the campaign, by sea and land. But to send this heterogeneous collection of ships, of diverse speeds, and unequal construction, with their half-trained crews and inexperienced leaders, against such a fleet as that of Admiral Togo is merely to court defeat.

Where Togo Was Superior.

"Eleven months of hard fighting and continuous practice in the terrible school of war have made Togo's squadron as fine a naval force as any Admiral could command. The ships are modern, they are uniform, they have been carefully prepared for the emergency they may have to face; the gunnery of the sailors is excellent, their spirit and discipline are unrivaled. Two or three of the Russian battleships are formidable on paper; but between the two fleets, as a whole, there can be no comparison.

"Why should the Russian Government insist upon provoking another catastrophe, and another utterly useless sacrifice of brave men's lives? The only sensible thing to do with Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet is to order it home without further delay."

Rojestvensky's ships seem to have been largely manned by quite inexperienced crews. When the Baltic Fleet was being prepared for sea the Russian correspondents of The London Times said:

"The recent accident to the new battleship Orel, a vessel which has sustained damage on no fewer than three separate occasions since the Summer began, was but the result of the extraordinary incompetence of a scratch crew. For months past considerations of general efficiency, and particularly of efficiency of the deck officer staffs and crews on board vessels 'for the Pacific,' have been subordinated to the necessity of getting the ships out to sea with the minimum of delay. No wonder Admiral Birileff continues to storm at his subordinates and the Kronstadt commander in chief continues to publish irate reprimands, of which the chief effect is to astonish the Russian public.

Russia Short of Good Men.

"The fact is Russia has not a sufficient supply of first-rate commanders, officers, engineers, artificers, general ratings, and well-trained sailors. Even when the Japanese struck their first blow last February many Russian ships in the Pacific were still short both in their officer and deck complements, while the shortage in their engine and boiler rooms was a matter of common knowledge in Russian naval circles at home; this, too, in spite of the fact that fairly numerous drafts had been hastily collected at Kronstadt, Libau, Sevastopol, and Nikolaieff and dispatched to Fort Arthur by rail across Siberia.

"When the time came for commissioning the vessels of the second Pacific Fleet it was found that the bulk of the material available for the purpose was of indifferent quality. The supply of naval engineers of any really competent standing and experience was especially deficient. It was the same with surplus boiler room staffs."

The value of the units comprising the Russian Baltic Fleet has been estimated at $65,000,000, allowing for the heavy depreciation in the older vessels, such as the Navarin and Sissoi. The most valuable were the four ships of the Borodino type, which cost about $7,500,000 each.

TO HONOR JAPANESE PRINCE.

German Emperor Will Show Special Favor to Arisugawa.

BERLIN, May 28.—The Prince and Princess Arisugawa, who will represent the Emperor of Japan at the wedding of the Crown Prince Frederick William and the Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenberg-Schwerin, will arrive here to-morrow. Emperor William invited the Prince and Princess Arisugawa to come to Berlin a few days in advance of the other royal personages, presumably because he wishes to pay them special attention.

Secretary Hay said that Prince Arisugawa is one of the ablest men in Japan. Emperor William has assigned Imperial Chamberlain von Mohl, who is versed in Japanese etiquette, to see that Japanese forms are strictly observed during the visit of the Prince and Princess.

MORE LODZ JEWS KILLED.

LODZ, May 28.—In disturbances to-day in the neighborhood of a synagogue soldiers fired on the crowd, killing two Jews.

Last night a workman who was mistaken for a police spy was stabbed to death.

The workmen are in an ugly mood. Many troops have arrived here.

INSANITY ON INCREASE IN NEW YORK STATE

Nearly 1,000 New Cases During the Past Year.

HOSPITALS BADLY CROWDED

State Charities Aid Association Opposed to Commission in Lunacy Responsible Only to the Governor.

The number of insane persons in New York State hospitals and licensed private asylums increased nearly 1,000 during the past year, according to a report which has just been submitted to the State Commission of Lunacy by the State Charities Aid Association. While this increase is smaller than that of the previous year, still it is in excess of other years, the total average yearly increase being 738.

The total number of insane persons in State hospitals and licensed private asylums on Oct. 1, 1904, was 26,861, an increase of 927 over the previous year. Of this total number, 25,019 patients were in the fourteen State hospitals, not including Matteawan and Dannemora, being 832 more than on Oct. 1, 1903.

"The system of complete control, both financial and administrative, of the State hospitals by the State Commission in Lunacy which has now been in operation for two years and a half," says the report, "is not, in our opinion, the wisest method of governing these institutions. Of course, in so short a time the effects of the change of system could not have made themselves felt to any great extent, and the extreme sensitiveness of public sentiment to any changes affecting the welfare of the insane, resulting from the agitation regarding the amendment of the insanity law, has doubtless exercised a great restraining influence, which cannot be expected to continue indefinitely.

"But while there has been no great change in the State hospitals since the amended law of 1902 went into effect, this law opens the way for the entrance of the abuses feared by the opponents of the change. To leave the welfare of so numerous and singularly helpless a class of dependents as the insane entirely in the hands of a commission of three, responsible only to the Governor, certainly seems dangerous."

Recommendation is again made, as in the report for 1903, for the establishment of a system of boarding out quiet insane patients in private families, after the plan adopted in several European countries.

Recommendation that improvement be made in the methods of deporting insane aliens, and that in the cases of such persons there be more co-operation between the State hospitals and the United States Immigration authorities, is an important feature of the report. It is asserted that the State Charities Aid Association has found that insane aliens deported by the Government have not always reached their homes as promptly as they should, and sometimes not at all.

In one of the five cases examined by the association it is shown that it was two months after she was deported from New York before the friends of an insane Finnish girl found her in a hospital in Helsingfors, Finland, where the steamship company sent her, though failing to send her baggage, or to notify her relatives. In another case, that of an Austrian girl, it is shown that she was deported, without proper clothing and without money, her relatives being prevented by the red tape of the State Hospital from providing the necessities. Their offer to send her over in care of a relative was refused.

The insane population of Manhattan, when the census was taken, was 7,427, with a population of 2,139,632. On Long Island there were 4,168 insane in a population of 1,555,152.

The Pianola is to-day recognized as a standard means of enjoyment in the country home

The Pianola Piano IN THE COUNTRY

No Other Provision is Necessary for the Summer's Music

The Pianola can now be obtained in two forms: either as an outside attachment to be used with any Piano, or as an integral part of a high grade Piano especially constructed to receive it, and known as the Pianola Piano.

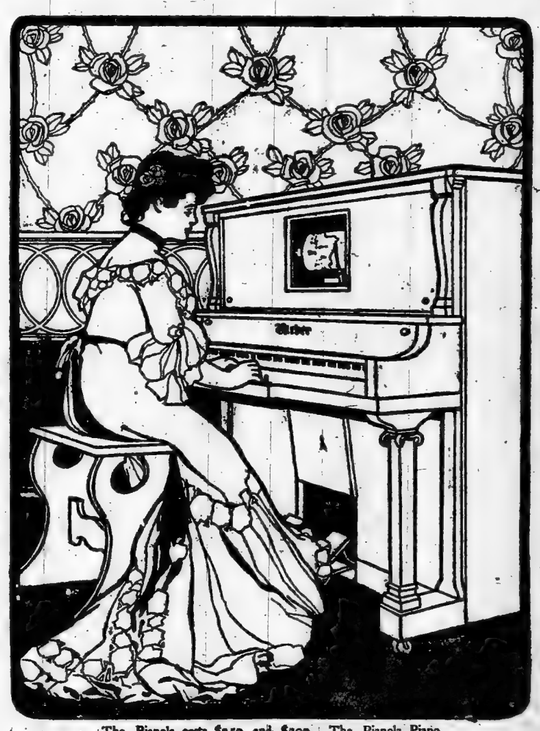
NO addition can be made to a country home which will insure as much enjoyment as a Pianola. Its ability to please is only limited by the power which music itself possesses to give pleasure.

For entertaining guests the Pianola is without an equal. The crowded recitals given during the season at Aeolian Hall prove this. These are attended by musicians and laymen alike, and even in the most inclement weather can fill a hall to overflowing. If a repetition of one of these programs were given in the country, it would prove a most delightful form of entertainment.

Even the constant presence of a skillful pianist could not equal the Pianola's capacity for giving pleasure. For unlike any human performer, its repertory is unlimited, embracing practically the whole musical literature of the world. Whether the demand is for a sonata, or a bit of rag-time, it is always equally ready, and able, to perform.

Among the most enjoyable features of summer life are its impromptu dances. These are always possible where there is a Pianola, and the musical program may vary from the fine old classic waltzes to two-steps and square dances, made up of all the season's most popular hits.

Last, but not least of the Pianola's merits, is its ability as an accompanist. Hundreds of accompaniments, for both high and low voice, and various solo instruments, have been arranged for it, and, ranging from the severest classic to the simplest folk song, they constitute a feature of the Pianola's usefulness, particularly valuable in the country, away from trained pianists.



The Pianola costs $250 and $300. The Pianola Piano which, besides containing a Metrostyle Pianola, equals any high-grade piano for hand playing, costs from $500 to $1,000. It may be bought on the monthly payment plan, and other pianos will be accepted at a fair valuation in exchange.

THE Pianola is to-day generally considered almost a necessity wherever there is a piano, but in the country it is especially desirable. If more than an enumeration of its pleasure-giving qualities were needed to indicate this, the fact that every season increasing numbers of owners take their Pianolas to their summer homes, would prove it.

The Pianola is the only Piano Player equipped with the Metrostyle or anything approximating it, and the Metrostyle is the only feature which enables the unmusical user of a Piano-Player to play artistically.

$1 & $1.25 rough silk colored shantungs 59c

BOUGHT at half price, we sell them at half price—a silk that's sold right here in New York every day under a copyright name for $1.25 a yard—same quality—same pure weave. Fourteen thousand yards were not enough to supply the demand last Monday. We've doubled that quantity—bought the entire overproduction from two great manufacturers for this sale—absolutely every yard—no chance of any other store offering so remarkable a bargain. Main Floor.

Fashion says silk shirt waist suits must be of rough shantung to be in style. Smart dressers are hastening to obey her command. There's no other silk so stunningly correct—none that wears so well. Come and see the bewildering display of Summer shades—twice as large as last Monday's, including Alice blue, vermilion, marine, navy, champagne, tan, reseda, myrtle, brown, lavender, gray, black and white. You can't help finding exactly what you want.

27 INCHES WIDE

Don't buy half cotton shantungs. These, at 59c., cost less than you'd pay for the half silk weave, which is not so dressy and does not wear so long. They're made to sell in competition with the pure Shantungs for those who do not care to pay $1 or $1.25. You'll quickly see the difference if you compare our Shantungs with those sold elsewhere. They're the strongest point in favor of this sale. Don't fail to select a supply—they'll be all sold by six o'clock.

69c a yard for $1 guaranteed black dress taffeta—27 inches wide—a rare value.

55c a yard for 8,500 yards of colored all silk taffetas in all the popular shades.

Finest French and Persian lawns special, 19c

TEN thousand yards of the 50c. quality and fifteen thousand yards of the 30c. and 35c. qualities, in widths of 36 to 48 inches, constitute the largest half price purchase ever made by a New York house. Scarcely a yard would sell for as low as 30c. regularly, but that's the special price sometimes asked, and we'd rather a thousand times you'd find surprise in a better bargain than you expected than be just satisfied. Main Floor.

Think how fast it will sell at 19c. for those cool Summer shirt waists and dresses, graduation gowns and warm weather costumes. Every yard is sheer, even and perfect. The very finest weaves are included. You're not likely to have another opportunity to buy the highest grade

a $3 straw hat 1.50
a $3 fancy vest 1.35

And you're ready for Decoration Day and the whole Summer. Second Floor.

A MANUFACTURER who makes most of the blue serge suits sold in high class stores at $25 favored Simpson Crawford Co. with his sample line the other day, because our order for the season was the largest on his books.

Arrived just in time for Decoration Day, when so many men want blue serge suits. They are most appropriate for the occasion and make a fine suit for the entire Summer. These are particularly dressy and we have one to fit you as if made to measure. $15.00

Made of the finest quality navy blue serge—smartly cut—broad shoulders and snug fitting collar—fashioned by the best custom tailors—double or single breasted style, at $15.

The straw hat and fancy vest sales continue:—

$3 vests at $1.35

THE kind desired by so many smartly dressed women for Decoration Day that we have taken advantage of the opportunity to clear out several hundred odd pairs, worth up to $5, including all sizes and every correct style, at $2 a pair.

$2.00 White canvas low shoes, dressy kid skin oxfords.

Some have large eyelets and wide laces.

This clearing is the result of the unusually busy selling of the past few days—we've usually grouped several lots, and they form one of the finest collections we've ever had—all new, perfect and up to date, fresh from one of the world's best factories. Second Floor.

Clearing of $24.75 tailor made suits, $12.50

THIS mammoth half price clearing is of the kind of suits you need all Summer for so many occasions, and the styles are right for you to wear into the Fall. A month ago you would have paid up to $24.75—we sold hundreds at that price—to-day we ask but $12.50—two suits for the price of one. Third Floor.

At 12.50 for 24.75 suits; all this season's best styles are included, in light and dark mixtures, Panamas and serges, Shepherd checks and fancy stripes, in various colors—blouse and Eton jackets—also short tight fitting coats. Misses' suits and sizes for small women are included in this wonderful sale—fashionable tailor made creations like the above—to-day, $12.50.

$14.75 to 29.50 suits in light weight fabrics for Summer wear, including misses' suits in this lot, outing materials, hard twisted worsteds and fancy mixtures and Panamas, and a few light weight broadcloths, long and short coats—tight or semi-fitted—jackets, blouse, bolero and cutaway styles, round length skirts—box or side plaited.

$17.50 for pretty new smart 22.50 model suits in silk taffeta, in plain or changeable colors, the new Kaffee coat style, also the demi costumes and longorin effects, together with the short blouse style, in a variety of colorings—crushed girdles—full round skirts, plaited, shirred or tucked.

Outing suits at 16.50; a very special value in light wool homespuns, so popular this season—beautiful light shades—short or ¾ length coat—sleeves and yoke lined with white taffeta — bound seams—detachable collar and cuffs of white pique—also semi-fitting suits for women and misses, the kind you'll want to wear on Decoration Day—various length skirts—excellent materials for outing wear—special value at $16.50.

$23.50 for 45.00 misses' and ladies' tailored suits, street gowns and costumes suitable for any occasion. All new suits. We have but one or two—in most instances only one—of a kind, in voiles, drap d'etes, made over silk drops, and in all the light Summer shades, such as reseda, Alice blue, champagne, gray, also blue and black, and pretty mixtures in various models.

$21.75 for 26.75 good heavy quality silk suits, in blue, black or the lighter shades, in various models, blouse, Eton, also short jacket effects, full round plaited skirt. Think how seasonable these suits are, and you'll be surprised that we should sell them for so little.

Lawn shirt waists at 79c.

NOT just lawn shirt waists, but the coolest, sheerest, handsomest shirt waists ever made to sell at $1.50. That's positively the regular price, and the attraction about this sale is that they are the very waists needed for Decoration Day wear and warm Summer days, when you want a waist that's comfortable, yet looking fresh. Second Floor.

You can't make a mistake in buying a complete Summer supply—you can't save as much if you wait—remember they nearly always sell for $1.50—special. 79c.

It would cost you more to make waists of the same quality—a good Persian lawn with a beautiful front in pointed yoke effect—edged with lace and embroidery—neatly tucked in the back—special Decoration Day value, 79c.

95c for fine lawn shirt waists, beautifully designed with embroidery or lace insertion and tucks.

2.95 for several beautiful $4 models in fine lawn shirt waists, exquisitely designed with deep plaits, rows of lace or embroidery—trimmed collar and cuffs.

PREDICT A REVERSAL OF MADDOX RULING

Opinion of Alexander's Lawyer on Equitable Mutualization.

CALL EFFECTS STARTLING

Say Holder of One Share May Now Defy All Others, Directors and Policy Holders.

A communication addressed by President James W. Alexander of the Equitable Life Assurance Society to the company's managers and agents was made public last night. It relates to the ruling made by Justice Maddox in the Lord suit on Friday, when he enjoined the carrying out of the proposed mutualization plan. Mr. Alexander's letter, which is dated May 27, reads as follows:

"Referring to the ruling just announced on a preliminary motion in a stockholders' action to restrain the society from carrying into effect the amended chapter adopted unanimously by the Board of Directors on April 6, I beg to transmit herewith a copy of an opinion as to the scope and effect of the court's ruling, which I have received from counsel:

"'New York, May 27, 1905.

"'James W. Alexander, Esq., President Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States.

"'Dear Sir: You have asked our advice as to the scope and effect of the decision of Mr. Justice Maddox granting a temporary injunction in the suit brought by Franklin B. Lord as a stockholder against the society to restrain further proceedings to carry into effect the amended charter of the society, which is now in the hands of the Superintendent of Insurance. This amended charter, unanimously adopted by the Board of Directors, confers upon the policy holders of the society the right to elect a majority of the members of the board, twenty-eight out of fifty-two members, reserving to the stockholders the right to elect the remaining twenty-four members.

"We have examined the opinion of Mr. Justice Maddox with the care and attention to which an opinion of a Justice of the Supreme Court, of recognized character and ability, is entitled. It is hardly necessary to say, however, that no opinion of any one Judge can be regarded as conclusive. The existence of Appellate tribunals and the frequency of reversals by those tribunals sufficiently attest the possibility of error in the courts of first instance.

"The decision of Mr. Justice Maddox involves most far-reaching consequences and momentous results, not only as to this society, but also as to all other companies organized, as is this society, under the General Insurance act of 1853.

"The learned Judge concedes that Section 52 of the existing insurance law of the State in terms applies to this society and authorizes any amendment of the charter by a vote of a majority of the Board of Directors, provided such amendment could have been included in the charter if originally incorporated under the existing law. The learned Judge also concedes that the consent of the majority of the stockholders is not necessary to such amendment.

"The learned Judge, however, as we understand him, holds that no amendment can be made under this section which in any degree alters or limits the voting power of the stockholders. He holds further that the right of stockholders to elect the entire Board of Directors cannot be taken away, limited, or impaired without the consent of every stockholder. Not only so, but he apparently holds to be illegal and void the provision in the original charter of this society authorizing the Board of Directors by a three-fourths vote to confer upon policy holders, holding policies of over $5,000 in amount, the right to vote in person for Directors.

"If, therefore, the opinion of Mr. Justice Maddox stands as a correct interpretation of the legal status of this society, a single stockholder, holding one share of stock of the par value of $100, has the legal right to defy the wishes of the remaining 999 shares and of the entire Board of Directors and of the policy holders and to prevent for all time any concession whatsoever to the claims—which the Board of Directors of this society has heretofore three times unanimously declared to be just and equitable—of policy holders to a share at least in the management of the vast assets of this great society.

"The same result follows as to all other life insurance companies organized under the act of 1853.

"These consequences of Mr. Justice Maddox's opinion are certainly most startling, and are of the greatest moment to the rights of policy holders in general.

"When the proposal to extend to policy holders of this society the right to vote was about to be brought by you to the attention of the Board of Directors, at its regular meeting in February last, the undersigned concurred in two written opinions—one to the effect that the board had the right to proceed under the charter and by a three-fourths vote of the board to confer upon policy holders, holding policies of over $5,000, the right to vote; the other to the effect that the charter could be amended under Section 52 of the existing insurance law by a majority vote of the board, so as to confer the right to vote upon policy holders generally.

"These opinions were not hasty or perfunctory, but were given by those who signed them after careful consideration and after examination of the authorities bearing upon the subject, including the latest decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the courts of this State. Giving all due weight and respect to the opinion of Mr. Justice Maddox, we remain firmly convinced of the correctness of the opinions which we gave in February last, and with a full sense of our professional responsibility, we feel it our duty to reiterate the same.

"We are of opinion that the learned Justice has fallen into error as to the true interpretation and effect of the statutory law of this State as applied to the charter of this society and the powers of the board and the rights of the policy holders and stockholders.

"To discuss these questions at length, or to point out the arguments on which we base our conclusions, or to review the decisions of the courts on which we rely for our conclusions would be clearly out of place in this opinion, which, after all, must depend for its value upon our professional judgment and upon the weight to which that professional judgment may be considered entitled.

"We are clearly of opinion that the decision of Mr. Justice Maddox is erroneous, and we believe that it should be and will be reversed upon appeal.

"To acquiesce in this decision would be to abandon what the Board of Directors have heretofore undertaken to accomplish in the direction of mutualizing this society as to its control and management—so as to carry out in part at least what the founders of this society had in mind when the charter was adopted.

"Not only did the original charter of this society provide in terms that the insurance business of the company should be carried on upon the mutual plan and that the Board of Directors should, in the met with the unanimous approval of the board, which at its meeting on the 16th of February last unanimously resolved in substance that it was the sense of the board that the right to vote should be given to the policy holders of the society at the earliest possible moment. From that time to the present the Board of Directors has remained committed unanimously to this proposition, the only question of difference being as to the extent to which the right of the policy holders to vote should be granted.

"The amended charter now before the Superintendent of Insurance for his approval embodies the unanimous result of the views of the members of the board, and confers upon the policy holders the right to elect a majority of the board. It would, in our opinion, be most injurious to the interests of the society and to its future welfare and its permanent prosperity if the amended charter should not be carried into effect, by reason of the injunction granted by Justice Maddox, and we are firmly of opinion that the Appellate Courts will decline to approve of the views expressed by Mr. Justice Maddox as to the validity of the proceedings of this board in adopting the amended charter.

"Yours very truly,

"WM. B. HORNBLOWER,
"ADRIAN H. JOLINE,
"WM. N. COHEN,
"CHARLES E. HUGHES."

As you will see, the result, which is upon a preliminary motion, is not a final disposition of the questions involved. I have undiminished confidence that the just and salutary action of the board in the adoption of the amended charter will eventually be sustained by the courts.

Very truly yours,

JAMES W. ALEXANDER.

ROOSEVELT AND THIRD TERM.

Rate Stand Will Commend Him to Democrats, Says Chandler.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Ex-Senator Chandler of New Hampshire, who was recently reported to have said that President Roosevelt would be nominated in 1908 by the Democrats and indorsed by the Republicans, has prepared a statement, in which he explains what he really did say.

In his statement Mr. Chandler says: "I said that if he were first nominated by the Democrats his announcement not to be a candidate a second time would not be binding, and if the Republicans also nominated him, as they would, he could not well decline."

When asked how it would be possible for Mr. Roosevelt to receive the support of the Democratic Party, Mr. Chandler replied:

"Only by his consistency and persistency in demanding and securing legislation whereby the Inter-State Commerce Commission may, upon complaint, remedy unreasonable railroad rates. The President has irrevocably committed himself to such a law. The railroads have just as irrevocably announced that it shall not pass. This is the great issue of the first decade of the new century."

WORLD'S SILK CONGRESS.

Italian Manufacturers Would Check the Extensive Use of Dyes.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The State Department is advised that an international silk congress is to be held in Turin, Italy, next year. The purpose is to discuss the character of silk manufactures in view of the extensive cheapening of silks by heavy dyeing.

For years there have been complaints concerning the non-durability of silk goods. It is said the purchasing public is largely at fault in buying cheap qualities of silk, to which the dyeing establishments have added so much coloring matter that the durability has been lessened.

The Silk Association of Turin proposes to establish a permanent investigation of silk textiles with reference to "loading" with dyes. The association is principally interested in an increased use of raw silk.

ONE DESERTER'S STORY.

Started False Report of Wholesale Desertions from the Columbia.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—It has developed that a single deserter from the United States cruiser Columbia caused the published statement that seventy-nine sailors deserted that ship while she was at Vera Cruz with the body of the late Ambassador, Señor Azpiroz. The official statement at the Navy Department is that nine men were absent without leave when the Columbia left Vera Cruz. Three of these, it is stated, rejoined the navy at New Orleans.

The deserter who furnished the information reflecting upon the service was lodged in jail at Vera Cruz on the charge of larceny, and appealed to Powell Clayton, American Ambassador to Mexico, for release. His letters caused active correspondence between the Ambassador and the Navy Department and the report that many men had left the ship.

FOR A NATIONAL UNIVERSITY.

Executive Council of Four Hundred Urges Senator Frye's Plan.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The Executive Council of the National Committee of Four Hundred to promote the establishment of the University of the United States, after consideration of the efforts made by its members to unite the various university organizations at Washington in one great university to-day issued a statement declaring it to be the duty of the National University Committee and of the National Education Association to devote their energies to urging the bill to this end introduced by Senator Frye at the last session of Congress.

The committee says that no university organization yet chartered can meet the demand for such a university at the National capital as shall be National, non-denominational, and non-partisan in character.

HUNGARY IS AROUSED.

People May Refuse to Pay Taxes or Furnish Recruits.

VIENNA, May 28.—In the developments which will probably follow the appointment of a Cabinet under the Premiership of Baron Fejervary the Hungarians foresee a serious infringement of their rights guaranteed by the constitution, which the King is sworn to respect, and which dates back a thousand years, consecrated by the blood of countless thousands of Hungarians.

The country is thoroughly aroused and means to protect its most sacred institution against any assault.

Among the measures which the people declare they will employ in defense of their constitutional rights are the refusal to pay taxes, which cannot be legally collected before the House of Deputies passes the budget; the refusal to grant recruits; and the refusal by Hungary of its pro rata contribution to the common expenses of the dual monarchy. In short, Hungary will oppose the demands of the State in every possible way.

The Hungarians are threatening every man who may accept a portfolio in the Fejervary Ministry with social ostracism.

A Tale of Homespun---
WOMEN'S SUITS

Another paradox. Lately we have dealt in paradoxes—true stories of apparently impossible but accurately exact trade-winning bargains.

The credulity of faith will be needed as you read this. It is a tale in three parts:

First: Honest Homespun. That's the cloth. Several weaves: plaids, checks, twills, bagging. Gray colors—shades for service in travel, on the street, at business.

Second: Good tailoring, long coats, plaited skirts, latest form, good seams, expert finish, the sort known only to the best retail trade. Critical women will perceive and approve.

Third: Cheapness curious, strange, possible only here. Don't bother to think it out. That's our business. But the fact is that these suits (three hundred) are to be sold which is a straight reduction of Eight Dollars. Their duplicates were Eighteen Dollars.

At Ten Dollars

Between WANAMAKER's and the New York Public the time has passed when argument, reasoning, explanation concerning the most unusual bargain is necessary.

Our statements and goods at prices to prove them are all that is needed. So it will result in the present case.

These three hundred suits have been made within the last ten days. Hence style-lateness.

We couldn't do it if confidence had not created concentration that makes market masters of our managers.

Summer Suits for Men

New Two Garment Models

Divorced from everything that even suggests "ready made," and honoring the tenets which the exclusive to-order tailor holds sacred, our new series of two garment summer suits promise this: to-the-hour in style, to be kind where nature may have been unkind, and to preserve the unities of form so long as the garments are in service—be that as long as it may. Altogether new and distinctive we present:

Two straight edge single breasted models
One conservative single breasted model
Two rounded edge single breasted models
One loose back double breasted model
One semi-fitted double breasted model
One conservative double breasted model

The fabrics include the finest flannels, worsteds, wool crashes, homespuns, tweeds, unshorn-worsteds, tropical worsteds and serges in the new shades of grey, tan and greenish mixtures together with navy and electric blue. $12.50 to $28.00

The coats are half, quarter or eighth lined with alpaca, mohair, sicilian or silk or unlined.

Straw Hats
FOR MEN

Special at $1.75

Value $2.50 and $3.00

Layman or hatman—either will confess that by all standards the hats should cost two-fifty and three dollars. Fine split and coarse or fine sennit straws without the slightest fault or flaw, in the correct models, with crowns and brims of well graduated proportions, from extreme to extreme, and narrow or wide silk bands.

Panama Hats
FOR MEN

KING OF ITALY OPENS AGRICULTURAL CONGRESS

David Lubin of California Honored at Ceremonies.

HE ORIGINATED THE IDEA

Hopes to Establish a Bureau of Agricultural Statistics for All Countries.

ROME, May 28.—In the historic hall of the Capitol to-day King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena inaugurated the National Conference on Agriculture in the presence of the Diplomatic Corps and 150 delegates. David Lubin of California, who originated the idea, was a central figure of the gathering, and was especially complimented by Minister Rava in his address of greeting.

esty had listened to a voice from distant America, the country of will and energy, addressed to him by a citizen who worshipped the idea that had made the conference possible; that of David Lubin, who felt the spiritual breath of Franklin and Washington.

The Turkish Ambassador, Rechid Bey, complimented King Victor Emmanuel for the initiative he had taken, and thanked the people of Rome for their hospitality to the delegates. The pro-syndic of Rome, saluting the delegates in the name of the Eternal City, invited the assembly to cry "Long live the King!" The invitation was answered with great enthusiasm.

The King and Queen then talked with those present. His Majesty shook hands with Ambassador White, and then with the American delegates, A. F. Woods and W. F. Hill.

The idea of the conference is to establish an office for the collection of statistics, and the dissemination of technical information, advice, &c., and to raise the institute to the dignity of an international parliament of agriculture, with effective legislative powers derived from all countries.

Mr. Lubin was visited by signatories, including Minister of Agriculture Rava and the British delegates, Lords Minto and Jersey.

MR. HAY IN PARIS.

To Stay There Three Days—Old Friends Call on Him.

PARIS, May 28.—Secretary Hay arrived here this morning for a three days' stay. His train was met by the officials of the American Embassy, and later calls were made upon him by Ambassador McCormick, ex-Ambassador Porter, and a number of old friends, including Henry Brooks Adams, who lunched with the Secretary and then took him for an automobile ride in the Bois de Boulogne.

Mr. Hay has benefited greatly by the treatment he underwent at Bad Nauheim, but by order of his physician he is observing a very strict regimen, which will compel him to refrain from accepting any invitations and making social or official engagements. He will observe the same quiet during his brief stay in London, preparatory to sailing for the United States.

BOY'S MIND GROWN LIKE A MUSHROOM

From Infancy to Maturity in Three Months.

TREATED BY OSTEOPATHY

The Strange Case of 16-Year-Old John Harry, Who Now Is a Member of Dr. Houghton's Church.

John Harry was one of the confirmation class yesterday in the Little Church Around the Corner, in Twenty-ninth Street, just west of Fifth Avenue. The Rev. Dr. George C. Houghton stood sponsor for John Harry's right to become one of the Episcopal faith. Bishop Greer officiated.

Of all the parents and relatives of the members of Dr. Houghton's confirmation class, none rejoiced more in the services than did the father and mother of John Harry. Their prayers of years had been answered. The mind of their sixteen-year-old son had passed in three months from that of a child to that of a mature person. He could reason and believe as they did, and had been adjudged competent for confirmation in the church of which they had been members for many years. They thought it almost a miracle.

John was born in England. His father is the coachman of S. T. Zabriskie of 14 East Thirtieth Street. John has been simple-minded. His father and mother prayed nightly for an awakening of his intelligence, but there seemed to be no response to their supplications. Their faith did not fail, however, and they continued to pray.

As the years passed their boy grew in stature and strength, but his mind did not wake up. He could articulate only a few words and did not comprehend much that was said to him. His usual answer to a question was a vacant smile.

He went regularly to Sunday school. He was obedient and kindly, but it was evident that he had only a hazy notion of what was said. He could not read, but he could sit still, smiling gratefully when the teacher spoke to him or when one of the other scholars would share a book or leaflet with him.

The children were good to "Jack," as they called him. They would volunteer to see him home, even if it was out of their way, and he showed his gratitude by bringing little gifts to them—an apple, a piece of string, or a horseshoe nail. The acceptance of his gifts gave him the keenest delight.

No place pleased him so well as the Sunday school, unless it was his father's stable. The horses would whiney at his coming, and the dogs came rollicking and barking to greet him. The most fractious horse would not throw back his ears when Jack entered the stall. He could wheel about in his little cart the new-born puppies without a snarl from their mother. When he was out in the streets strange dogs, with wagging tails, would seek his favor. The animals seemed to understand him and love him like the children did in the Sunday school, but he shunned strange grown-ups.

Dr. Houghton took a deep interest in the boy who was so gentle and patient. About three months ago the clergyman called the attention of his own physician, Dr. E. W. S. Howard of 509 Fifth Avenue, to the boy. The doctor is an osteopathist. After an examination the doctor declared that the boy was not an epileptic; his disorder was due to a lack of circulation of blood in the brain. The intellect was dormant, and the boy was in a state of torpor in all but his physical life.

The physician thought that osteopathic treatment would awaken the boy's mind, and Dr. Houghton invited him to take Jack as a patient. Dr. Howard consented, and his body has since been regularly manipulated in accordance with the principles of osteopathic treatment, with remarkable results.

Dr. Houghton said last night, when asked how it happened that the boy had passed in three months from practical infancy to maturity, so that he could be deemed competent for confirmation:

"It is all true, and remarkably wonderful. I believe it to be an act of God, using the physician as the instrument of His will. I never heard Jack utter a word until recently. He would just grin at any question, and never volunteered a remark. The doctor gave him osteopathic treatment, and his mind woke up.

"I went to see the boy at his home a few days ago. They told me that he could recite the Ten Commandments and the Apostles' Creed. He was thoroughly intelligent and a fit candidate for confirmation. Jack was seated near the window looking out. In the corner of the room were two of his dogs. They seemed to resent my coming and walked out with an air of indignation at my presence.

"After I had talked a long time with the boy I asked him what had been in the room when I came in and he said the two dogs that had walked out. That showed he had been observing. I asked him what he had seen on Fifth Avenue, where he had been walking that afternoon, and he gave me a perfectly intelligent and interesting account of his observations.

"He told me of his studies, how he was learning to read, and of the many things that were of interest to him since his mind had awakened. He knew his Catechism and all the essentials of his church life perfectly. He was bright and alert, filled with curiosity about the world which had been opened to his understanding, innocent like a child, and eager to learn. It is one of the most remarkable cases in my experience."

Great care is being taken not to overburden the boy's mind, but this is difficult because he is intent on catching up with the mental development of the other children he knows. He learned his alphabet in a singularly short time, and can now easily spell most of the ordinary words. He remembers a good deal of his past, particularly his old-time friends. He delights in meeting the children who were kind to him, and has not lost his fondness for his animal friends. The dread of music he formerly had is gone, and he finds keen delight in it. His mental development is being watched with the keenest interest, particularly by Dr. Howard.

The physician was out of town yesterday.

LEFT AN INJURED WOMAN.

Conductor Sent His Car Along After She Had Fallen Off.

Special to The New York Times.

KEARNY, N. J., May 28.—Mrs. Catherine Stewart of 91 Johnston Avenue, fell headlong off an open trolley car at the East Newark end of the Erie Railroad bridge over the Passaic yesterday. According to the passengers the conductor took his car back to where the woman lay, and after remarking that he "guessed she was all right," and the car was behind time, continued his trip to Newark.

Several young men who were passengers on the car assisted Mrs. Stewart to the office of Dr. John W. Reid, a short distance away. She had a scalp wound, and was suffering from shock. After her wounds had been dressed she was taken home.

DID YOU KNOW IT RAINED IN FAR OFF BROOKLYN?

Streets Flooded, Trolley Traffic Impeded, Spring Hats Ruined.

ONE HOUSE BLOWN DOWN

Heavy Downpour, with Fierce Wind, Drenches a Part of the Borough.

While the sun was shining in Manhattan yesterday afternoon the weather cut some freaky capers in Brooklyn. Bright sunshine and breezeless air prevailed in one-half of the borough, while a wind storm and heavy downpour of rain was bothering other sections.

In the districts visited by the storm streets were flooded, trolley traffic was impeded, and fences and one house were blown down. While this was going on in the downtown section the sun shone, the air was still and lazy, and women promenaded about in their Spring finery, ignorant of the havoc which millinery and thin gowns were suffering only a few blocks away.

The storm came on about 4:30 o'clock. Black clouds gathered over Bushwick, Upper Williamsburg, East New York, Flatbush, Coney Island, and the suburban districts. Gusts of wind picked up the dust from the streets, ripped awnings and signs from their fastenings, and set the hats of pedestrians soaring.

There was a sudden heavy downpour of rain and the wind increased in violence. In some districts the rain continued for only ten or fifteen minutes; in others the downpour lasted for nearly an hour.

In Flatush, Prospect Heights, and Windsor Terrace the rain came down in sheets, and some of the streets were soon ankle deep in water. In Ocean, Coney Island, and Flatbush Avenues and in the Brighton Beach Railroad cut the water came almost up to the platforms of cars, and on several of the lines running into Coney Island and the suburbs traffic was delayed. In some of the low-lying neighborhoods in the southern part of the borough the water overflowed the curbs and flooded cellars.

Prospect Park was crowded with Sunday visitors when the sudden downpour came, and there was a wild stampede for cover. Pleasure seekers riding down to Coney Island in the open cars were drenched and many a Spring hat was made to droop.

For a few minutes the wind swept over parts of East New York and Brownsville with tornadolike fierceness. It ripped out the beams and planking of a house being built at 185 Georgia Avenue, causing the front of the structure to collapse. No one was injured.

The large section of the borough westward of Franklin Avenue was unaffected by the storm. The strange condition prevailed that while on the east side of Franklin Avenue the rain was coming down in sheets, a little to the west not a drop of rain was falling.

TRAIN ROBBER TRAPPED.

Men He Held Up Catch Him and Get Reward of $1,000 Each.

ST. PAUL, May 28.—Express Messenger Laub and Engineer Wilson to-day received $1,000 each for capturing a man who held up the east-bound North Coast Limited train last night on the Northern Pacific near Bear Mouth, Mon.

The train had just finished taking water at Bear Mouth when the engineer and the fireman heard a gruff voice ordering them to hold up their hands, the command being reinforced by two large revolvers in the hands of a tall, broad-shouldered fellow, whose face was partly concealed by a slouch hat pulled low on the forehead.

The engineer and fireman promptly obeyed, and they were ordered to descend and cut loose the locomotive and the express car. This was done, and the bandit ordered them to pull out, he remaining in the cab and keeping the fireman and engineer covered with revolvers.

Two miles east of Bear Mouth the locomotive and the express car were halted. The robber, leaving the fireman in the cab, marched the engineer to the express car, where he was ordered to call the messenger out. Laub promptly locked the car door, whereupon the robber threatened to blow up the car with the messenger inside it.

Under this duress Laub came forth and gave up his revolver. He was placed beside the engineer. The robber attached three sticks of dynamite in succession to the safe in the car and blew off the door, the explosion also shattering the side of the car. The engineer and the messenger were then driven into the car by the robber.

When Wilson, at his order, struck a match, the bandit saw the wealth of the safe scattered about, and this sight momentarily drew his eyes from Messenger Laub, who had picked up a heavy piece of iron from the wrecked safe. But the engineer saw Laub and blew out the match. At the same moment the iron descended on the outlaw's skull, knocking him unconscious. The messenger and engineer quickly bound him.

After the contents of the safe had been gathered up and temporary repairs made, the locomotive ran back to the train at Bear Mouth and the journey eastward was continued. No passengers were molested. The contents of the safe were not much injured, and none of the valuables was destroyed. The robber, who was turned over to the county authorities at Durham, has not been identified. He remained unconscious all day.

Jerome Detective Arrests Man Who Scared Women on Elevated Train.

Frederick Wolbschack, a clerk, living at 320 River Street, Hoboken, was arrested last night by County Detective Riordan of District Attorney Jerome's staff. The charge against the prisoner was carrying concealed weapons.

Wolbschack created a panic among the women passengers on a south-bound Third Avenue elevated train between the Chatham Square and the City Hall stations by flourishing a loaded revolver. Detective Riordan was in a car ahead, and when a cry for police was raised Riordan ran back. Riordan grabbed Wolbschack and placed him under arrest. A loaded revolver was found in his pocket.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., May 28.—An eleven months' old child of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Hult, well-known residents of this city, fell out of bed Saturday night and was instantly killed.

The mother went from the room, leaving the baby asleep, and when she returned a few moments later she found the child on the floor dead. Its neck was broken.

Coffee Hurt You?

No need to get mad now, tear up the paper, or shout "nonsense, good coffee never hurt anyone."

You know better than that for you can point out all around you folks who are the worse for coffee's slugging. Think over a few coffee-drinking friends and casually enquire if they are entirely and perfectly well and just how coffee treats them.

If it hurts others isn't it just possible?

Catch the drift, don't you?

In fact after you have studied the matter a bit it will come plain that if you are a coffee drinker the chances are you already have some form of incipient or perhaps fixed organic disease due entirely to the coffee—constipation, rheumatism, eye trouble, nervous headaches, nervous prostration or others of the well proven coffee ails. You can decline to look the thing squarely in the face and peg along with the coffee.

Some day Nature will haul you up SHORT!

IT'S A POOR BARGAIN

to swap health and a clear, business-like head, for a few cups of coffee each day.

Every coffee toper tries to wiggle round and charge his aches and ails to weather, overwork, too much or too little food, this, that or the other thing, so it isn't his Master, coffee.

A Sure Personal Test

will locate the exact cause of your steady destruction of health, if that cause be coffee. It's worth knowing the plain, sober fact before fixed organic, heart or other disease sets in, which perhaps cannot be cured.

The test is pleasant, accurate and satisfying.

Quit coffee absolutely for 10 days and in its place use Postum.

BE SURE the Postum is properly boiled as per directions on pkg. (and that's easy) then you have the famous Food Coffee, with the deep seal brown which turns to rich golden brown when rich cream is added and the flavor is crisp, snappy and soft like the high grades of Old Gov't Java.

If in two or three days you begin to sleep soundly at night, digest your food better, stomach and bowels show signs of recovery, or the old feeling of weakness at the heart leaves, or eyes get stronger and head works clearer, (the ails of coffee drugging are multitudinous) the facts will be before you and

CAMPAIGN BEGUN TO CONVERT NEW YORK

Organ-Carrying Autos Call Sinners to Repent.

WOMAN SUPPLIED 10 OF THEM

First Great Mass Meeting Held, but It Failed to Fill the Big Academy of Music.

The first of the great religious mass meetings, by which, in the language of the evangelists, New York City is to be "redeemed to Christianity," was held yesterday afternoon in the Academy of Music. The big theatre was perhaps two-thirds filled, and in the enthusiasm it engendered it was at any rate a success.

To insure a crowd a dozen automobiles, ten of them furnished by a woman who is deeply interested in the present revival movement, had invaded the main thoroughfares and the side streets. Reinforced by music, the autoists told of the meeting, which was to make religious history, and besought all to attend.

Some of these speakers were ministers. From other automobiles laymen told of the movement. Broadway, from Astor Place to Times Square, was a fruitful ground for labor. The automobiles did duty at Union Square, Eighteenth Street, Twenty-third Street, Madison Square, and Forty-third Street. They halted also in the side streets, and everywhere the volunteer redemptionists preached the crusade which was to mark the Summer and hymns were sung.

One group of three automobiles carried a brass band. Wherever a stop was made a crowd gathered about this. The single automobiles carried a chauffeur, a speaker, and a musician, who played on a small organ fitted between the seats.

The advance agents for the mass meeting began their crusade at 3 o'clock. The services in the Academy of Music began at 4. At that hour it was evident that good work had been done, but that the seating capacity of the building would by no means be tested.

The stage was occupied by a choir, led by the Rev. Dr. J. H. Jacobs, Superintendent of the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting and head of the musical department of the revival movement. Dr. Nice of the Salvation Army was on hand with his violin, and all of the singers of St. George's Church, including Choirmaster Norris and Soloist Burleigh.

A song service opened the exercises, Dr. Jacobs leading. Then the Rev. Dr. J. C. Keevil of the Second Avenue Baptist Church opened the meeting with prayer. Dr. C. L. Goodell of Calvary Methodist Church was the first speaker.

"For what is really the inception of the Christian campaign in New York," he said, "one woman furnished ten automobiles. As long as there are women who will do so much for the cause of Christ there will be found preachers and workers enough to fill them and tell the people what their souls need.

"Religion is not a theory, but a life. It is something to be worked out through the finger tips and spoken through the lips. The question we present to you today is not what you believe, but what you live. All that a Christian needs to do is to fear God, live justly, love mercy, and live as nearly a Christlike life as may be."

Soloist Burleigh sang and then Bishop Courteney of St. James's Episcopal Church made a powerful appeal for the better life. Those who lived in sin, for pleasure, or for wealth, were dead while they lived, he said.

"Jesus Christ," said the Bishop, "said that a man's life consisted not in the abundance of his possessions. It is good to eat and good to drink and good to be merry, but not good to live to either one of these three ends."

In conclusion the Bishop in an appeal, which brought tears to the eyes of many of his hearers, urged them to live the true life.

"If you are living or will live this life eternal," he said, "whether you be prosperous on this earth or poverty stricken; whether you are happy or sad, whether you are attended by sunshine or walk in the shadows of the Garden of Gethsemane, not all that man can do, nor Satan and all the powers of hell, can prevent your living with God now and forever."

Dr. James B. Ely of the Evangelistic Committee asked all who believed in Jesus to raise their hands. Hands from all over the house went up. After the meeting he greeted all who expressed a desire to mend their ways. He gave a Bible to a woman who said she was more than twenty-five years old, had never attended church regularly nor professed Christianity, but wished to enroll herself as a Christian.

There will be two open air meetings under the auspices of the Evangelistic Committee in the financial district this morning— one in Wall and the other in Broad Street. On Friday at noon a four-horse wagon will begin an evangelistic street campaign.

BECAUSE SHE WOULDN'T WED.

Her Elderly Suitor Shot Her and Killed Himself—A Jersey Tragedy.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., May 28.—Louise Kramer, twenty years old, was shot by a man twice her age at her home, in Scotch Plains, because she would pot marry him. Then the rejected suitor fled to the woods and put a bullet in his own brain. The girl is in the Muhlenberg Hospital, her jaw broken and a hole in her opposite cheek where the bullet passed out.

Frank Huber was the name of the rejected suitor. He came here about a year ago, and went to work as a machinist in the Scott Press Works. He was a widower, and it was said that he had left three children at his former home, in Altoona, Penn.

Louise Kramer is the eldest of eight children. For six months, despite discouragements by the girl, Huber paid her attentions. Several times he asked her to marry him, and every time she refused. On Saturday morning she threatened to tell her parents if Huber did not cease annoying her.

That afternoon Huber went to Newark. It is supposed that he bought a revolver there. After breakfast yesterday morning he found Louise alone, and again renewed his suit. She said she would tell her father about him at once. Huber then drew his revolver and shot her in the face. She fell, and he ran out of the house.

Two hours later, when search was being made for the man, one of the villagers recalled hearing a shot in the woods an hour or more before. Guided by this clue, the searchers found Huber's body. He had put the muzzle of the revolver in his mouth, and the bullet had reached his brain.

The girl will recover.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., May 28.—The agitation to prevent the appearance of Nan Patterson in "A Romance of Panama" here on Tuesday has so far failed. Mayor F. C. Kirkendall admitted this morning after a conference with attorneys that he had not the legal power to say Miss Patterson should not appear on the stage.

He made an appeal to Manager Harry Brown of the theatre, but Mr. Brown said he could do nothing, as the contract had been signed, and to break it now might subject the managers to a suit for heavy damages. GERMAN CATHOLICS MEET.

Urged to Combat Socialism—4,000 Attend Convention.

The New York German Catholic State Federation began its tenth annual convention here yesterday. It is to last three days. The chief features of the day were a parade in the morning and a monster mass meeting at Carnegie Hall in the evening. Fully four thousand persons were present, comprising many of the representative Germans in this city. Toward the end of the meeting, when Bishop William Stang of Fall River had concluded his speech on "The Papacy and Our Duty," he proposed a cheer for the Pope. The audience arose and cheered with all its might.

Nearly every speaker emphasized the need of religious training in the schools, and the necessity of fighting Socialism. The subject of Socialism was also broached by Archbishop Farley. The Archbishop was almost the last speaker, but the audience waited for him to speak, although it was nearly 11 o'clock when he arose.

"I want to say a few words to you before I bestow the blessing," the Archbishop said. "I learned of your great procession this morning. I was very sorry not to be present, but at the same time I felt it to be my duty to address a body of Italians and in their own tongue, and I could attend. I am pleased, however, at the demonstration which you made, and the impression of faith which it gives to others.

"You have before you as Catholic societies a great work. A band of men has sprung up who have cut loose from the harbors of faith and are drifting about on the ocean of false belief. They have trampled under foot that which was as a bond to them before. They have cast the Bible out of the schools. They have turned their backs upon the holy estate of matrimony. Socialism is growing.

"The men who have now cut loose from every harbor seek now to anchor their craft at the feet of our glorious Pontiff. Upon you devolves to a great extent the fighting of these heresies, the duty of bringing men back to their religious belief and right thinking again."

Bishop Stang, who spoke in German at some length, explained the attitude of the Church toward the Pope. He began by telling a story of a very modern Italian, who he said stepped into a coach with him while traveling from Milan to Rome.

"The Italian talked glibly for a while about the Pope and Rome," he said, "and I finally had to confess to him that I was an American priest going to Rome, and of course was going to see the Pope. 'Great Scot!' said the Italian facetiously, 'the Pope is God Almighty.' 'No,' I replied, 'the Pope is not God Almighty. He is a human who will die, but the Papacy will live forever.'"

A message from the Pope to the convention was read. It was signed by Merry del Val, Secretary of State to the Pope, and read:

"The Holy Father requests me to congratulate you and the general Catholics in your city and sends his blessing."

In the afternoon the delegates held their business session at the Gilsey House, the headquarters of the convention. In the morning, the delegates assembled in St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, where they were welcomed for the Mayor by Corporation Counsel John J. Delany.

After the welcome at the asylum, the delegates, with many local societies, marched to St. Joseph's Church, in East Eighty-seventh Street.

STOLEN, ONE JARDINIERE.

To the Disgust of Two Detectives Called Out for a 5th Av. Robbery.

Detectives O'Connor and Crotty are now known among their comrades at the East Fifty-first Street Station as the "jardiniere sleuths." This is why. On Saturday evening about 8 o'clock a hurry call was received by Sergt. Ennis to investigate a serious robbery in Fifth Avenue. The two detectives were sent.

The ground floor at the address given is occupied by a woman's tailor. The place is not far from Delmonico's. To the proprietor the detectives duly announced themselves.

"Gracious me," said he. "Are you detectives?"

They admitted it, and O'Connor asked what was wrong.

"Wrong? Why, I have been robbed," said the tailor. A little while ago some one stole from in front of my place a rare jardiniere."

"A what?" asked O'Connor.

"A jardiniere—a fancy wooden box, as it were, full of violets."

The detectives' dreams of honorable mention dissolved into air.

"I was measuring a customer, when suddenly I missed the odor of violets, and, looking up, saw that the jardiniere was gone. Some thief had stolen it. I am distraught. I cannot work until I recover my property and the posies."

"Fudge," murmured the detectives in concert.

"Did you speak?" asked the tailor.

"Oh, we'll get the man all right," said Crotty, and the two left the store.

"Let's go back to Second Avenue," said Crotty.

"Let's," said O'Connor.

The jardiniere thief was still at large last night.

AGED COUPLE DIVORCED.

He's 75, She's 70—Hadn't Conversed in Twenty Years.

Special to The New York Times.

LAWRENCEBURG, Ind., May 28.—Mrs. Julia A. Grubbs, seventy years old, obtained a divorce yesterday from Hamilton A. Grubbs, aged seventy-five, and the court gave her a judgment for $2,000 as alimony. The Grubbs were lovers as school children, and after a long courtship were married nearly a half century ago, and have reared six children.

Mrs. Grubbs alleged in her petition that twenty years ago, after a family quarrel, Mr. Grubbs abandoned her as a wife, and although they had lived in the same house ever since, they had never spoken to each other.

A few months ago the last effort was made by relatives to bring about a reconciliation, but it proved unavailing, and a divorce was decided upon. Grubbs has property worth $50,000.

PROTECTS HERO FUND GIFTS.

Commission Will See That Beneficiaries Use Money Rightly.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 28.—The four women to whom cash prizes were given by the Carnegie Hero Fund have accepted them. Vouchers will be made out so that the money can only be applied to the lifting of mortgages in three cases, and for the education of Miss Atwood of Melrose, Mass., in the other.

The commission will not take any chance of having any one talk the women into investing the money on "sure thing" schemes. The medals are to be the richest works of art given by any humane society in the world.

EEL HOLDS UP TRAIN.

Drawn Into Rockaway Engine's Injector, It Is Believed.

Whether an eel was responsible for the halting of a Rockaway Beach train on its way to Long Island City yesterday afternoon will be determined to-day in the shops of the Long Island Road. The train was crossing the Jamaica Bay trestle, when Engineer Davis found that the injector was working poorly and the boiler was not being properly fed.

After working some time without avail he found it necessary to draw the fire. After an hour's delay the train was pushed into the Long Island City terminal by another engine. Davis is satisfied that the trouble was caused by an eel, drawn in when the tank was filled and choking the injector.

NEW YORK TEAMSTERS TALKING OF A STRIKE

May Go Out in Sympathy with Chicago Express Men.

LOCAL UNIONS DISCUSS IT

Teamsters' Envoy Coming Here—Chicago Employers' Counsel Arrives to Confer with Express Officials.

The refusal of the express companies to take back their employes who went out on strike in Chicago was discussed with much excitement in all the New York locals of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, and there was talk of a sympathetic strike. Whether the New York teamsters can be induced to go out will depend on the action of the executive council of the New York district of the Brotherhood, which will meet this week.

Nearly all the twenty-three locals held meetings yesterday evening to take action on the Chicago strike. The largest meeting was held by the dry goods teamsters, known as Local 708 of the International Brotherhood, in a hall at Eighteenth Street and Eighth Avenue. The other locals which held meetings included those of the express drivers, coal drivers, paper truck drivers, mail drivers, building material drivers, cab drivers, sand and excavation drivers, flour and feed drivers, and grocery wagon drivers.

Most of the meetings, all of which were behind closed doors, were addressed briefly by General Organizer Moynihan of the International Brotherhood, who is now in this city.

It was admitted after the meeting of the local of dry goods teamsters that important action was taken, but the officers of the local refused to say what it was. President Hoffman, however, said he did not believe a sympathetic strike would be called without the sanction of the Executive Council, which will meet this week. The Executive Council consists of the Executive Committees of all the locals. When asked if the action taken at the meeting was in reference to financial assistance President Hoffman said:

"We have been sending contributions to the strikers for some time. It is safe to say that, all told, the aggregate contributions from the different locals have figured up $1,000 a day."

General Organizer Moynihan said:

"We have not been asked to strike in sympathy. No sympathetic strike will be ordered unless it is requested by the officers of the Chicago Express Drivers' Union or other officers of the other unions, and sanctioned by the Executive Council of the New York District."

It was learned that a number of the agreements between the New York teamsters and their employers have expired and have not yet been renewed. It is said that their renewal will depend upon the attitude of the unions regarding the Chicago strike. Before the situation reached its present acute point and when there was still a chance for a settlement in Chicago the general feeling of the New York unions was against a sympathetic strike.

The local which could strike most effectively would be that of the dry goods teamsters, which could tie up all delivery of goods to and from the piers east and west through the entire wholesale dry goods district. This would affect the trade in other cities.

The mission of James E. Barry, business agent of the Chicago Express Drivers' Union, who was said yesterday to be on his way to New York, could not be learned last evening at the headquarters of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters in this city.

Levy Mayer, attorney for the Chicago Employers' Association, representing the express companies, is in town to confer with the New York officials of the companies concerning plans to break up the strike.

"I am not in a position yet to say what I shall do while here," said Mr. Mayer. "We are in this fight to the bitter end. There will be no concessions made to the strikers. We are gaining strength daily, and there is no going back on the position we have taken.

"The express company teamsters occupied the highest position of trust and confidence in the craft. They are in charge of valuable packages of freight and money. They were frequently, repeatedly, and explicitly warned that if they struck they would part permanently, and would not be re-employed. Notwithstanding this caution, and in defiance of their contract, they struck. They made no complaint and had no grievance of any kind. They were completely satisfied with their wages, hours, and all other conditions. They struck solely because they were required by their employers to make deliveries in houses which the teamsters' union had boycotted."

CHICAGO, May 28.—Nothing developed to-day to indicate an early settlement of the teamsters' strike. At the meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor to-day arrangements were made for holding a strike demonstration on July 5. At the meeting the strike situation was discussed in all its details by representatives of the various trades unions, and the sentiment was that the teamsters should continue the fight until the express companies offer some sort of compromise.

With more than 700 policemen and Deputy Sheriffs detailed on strike duty, the employers declare that during the present week they will be able to demonstrate to the strikers that any further continuation of the fight will be suicidal to the Teamsters' Union.

BRIGHTER FOR TRUST CO.

Merchants' Receivers Back from Rutland Enthusiastic—No Gould Offer.

Douglas Robinson and Otto T. Bannard of the New York Trust Company, receivers of the Merchants' Trust Company, returned yesterday from Rutland, Vt., where they went on Friday with Edward Lauterbach and Senator Alfred R. Page to look over the Rutland Street Railway and other property at that place on which the company made heavy loans. They were undisguisedly satisfied with the results of their trip, and while no member of the party would make any official statement, they let it be understood that the outlook for the clearing up of the affairs of the Merchants' Trust Company without loss to anybody was much brighter than any one had dared to hope.

"The Rutland property is in excellent shape," said one member of the party, "and there is strong reason to expect that a considerable sum may be realized on it. The People's Gas Light Company is particularly in good financial condition and gives more promise than the power or the street railway properties. I should not wonder at all if it proved possible to dispose of this on such advantageous conditions that the affairs of the Merchants' Trust Company can be straightened out without the necessity for an assessment of the stockholders."

It was also learned yesterday that since the receivers have taken charge of the company a syndicate, the composition of which is not known, has offered to take over the interests of the Merchants' Trust Company in the Rutland properties and in the Hudson Valley Railroad at a price said to represent about 50 per cent. on the par value. No action whatever has been taken on this offer, as it would be vain to do so until the question of a permanent receivership for the company has been settled by the courts.

The receivership question will be settled on Saturday, and there seems small doubt that the temporary receivers will be made permanent. The offer mentioned will then be taken up for consideration as quickly as possible.

A rumor that Frank J. Gould was behind the syndicate in question was positively denied yesterday by a person close to Mr. Gould.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., May 28.—The receivership for the Hudson Valley Railway Company, provided for by Justice Henry T. Kellogg in his decision in the case of Daniel J. Halpin against the Hudson Valley Railway Company and the Merchants' Trust Company, begins after twenty days, and in case the Hudson Valley Company does not then pay about $3,300, the amount of the finding in favor of Halpin. This proceeding does not grow out of the recent failure of the Merchants' Trust Company. It was begun a year ago.

AUTO SPURTED FLAMES.

But Dr. G. A. Macdonald in It Only Went the Faster—Machine Wrecked.

A gasoline runabout, owned by Dr. George A. Macdonald of 803 Madison Avenue, caught fire yesterday afternoon at One Hundred and Eighty-seventh Street and Washington Avenue. In it was its owner and John Bowler, the colored chauffeur.

Along Bathgate Avenue the machine ran afire. People shouted warnings to its occupants, but they thought the shouts indicated customary animosity to motor cars, and paid no attention. But all this time, unknown to them, flames and smoke were pouring out of the back of the machine, and a shouting mob was following.

The auto turned into Washington Avenue, and to escape from the crowd the chauffeur put on speed. Soon the clattering of hoofs suggested to the doctor that he was being pursued by the police for speeding. Immediately he shut off the power, and Mounted Policeman Martin of the Bathgate Avenue Station came alongside.

"I didn't know I was violating the speed law," began the doctor.

"That's not it," said the policeman. "Your machine's afire. You'll be roasted alive."

Dr. Macdonald and the chauffeur jumped from the machine. The policeman turned in a fire alarm. Two engines responded, but water was useless to put out the fire. Sand was tried with better success.

The machine was almost a total wreck by this time. All of the woodwork was burned, and the tires melted. The police put the damage at $500. It will probably be much more.

GANG THREATENS CORNISH.

Its Leader Was Sent to Jail for Robbing the Contractor's Wife.

Threats have been made against the life of John W. Cornish, the contractor whose wife was assaulted and robbed by "Tarby" Murphy last February. "Tarby" was sentenced to the State Prison and was sent there from the Tombs on March 31. It is the members of Murphy's east side gang, Mr. Cornish thinks, who are plotting to harm him.

The assault on Mrs. Cornish occurred on Feb. 18. She and her husband were about to enter their house at 722 East One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street when Murphy made a dash at Mrs. Cornish, tore a seven-thousand-dollar brooch from her neck, and dodged around the corner and out of sight. He was captured by the police about a week later in his flat in One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Street, but the brooch has never been recovered. There is a thousand-dollar reward still outstanding for it.

In many indirect ways Mr. Cornish has been threatened in the last few weeks. Friends of his have been getting letters which say that he had better look out, and give up his search for the brooch unless he wants to be hurt. Last night the contractor intimated that the gang was making use of a political pull in the district to intimidate him.

OLD SERGEANT'S CLOUD SHED NO GLOOM AT SEA

John Conroy Was the Life of the St. Paul's Smoking Room.

YET HE CAME A PRISONER

Back from County Sligo to Soldiers' Home to Explain Where Bunkie's Money Went.

On the American Line steamship St. Paul, which reached New York from Southampton yesterday, was an old, grizzled man in a dark-blue uniform—erect, but with a slight yet unmistakable bend at the knees which betrays the old cavalryman. He was First Sergt. John Conroy, formerly of the First Cavalry.

All the way across Sergt. Conroy had been the life of the smoking room. For twenty-three years and four months Conroy had served the Stars and Stripes, and he had had experiences in the service. Was it a story of Indian fighting on the plains that the crowd wanted to hear? Well, he could tell many such a story, because they were part of his history. Did somebody ask for a yarn of the Mississippi campaign with hot coffee spilled by the boots-and-saddles call and forgotten ten minutes later in a dash through a swamp? Conroy could tell it.

These stories he not only could tell, but did tell. He had as much fun in the telling as his listeners did in the hearing.

There were always two men in the smoking room who wanted to hear "just one more, Uncle John, before we have our night cap." They were younger men. They always seemed to be with Conroy.

"Ah, those Americans stick together," said a British officer who was aboard.

"Where are you going?" asked one of the trio's ocean acquaintances as they were going down the gangplank.

"Guess we'll go straight to Washington, won't we, Uncle John?" said one of the younger.

"Yes, Sir," said Conroy, quietly.

Crossing the gangplank meant a change for ex-Sergt. John Conroy. He was a prisoner, returning to his country on extradition papers to stand trial for alleged misappropriation of a trust fund. The two men with him were Sergt. Joseph Conroy and Detective L. C. Trumbo of Washington.

Of himself and his trouble the old soldier talked freely. He was born in Ballymote, County Sligo, Ireland, coming to this country when a boy. When the civil war broke out he enlisted with the Union cause, and for nearly a quarter of a century followed the profession of a soldier.

On June 25, 1888, Conroy was mustered out of service with a pension. He then entered the Soldiers' Home at Washington, D. C., where he acted as a Sergeant. Until last year all went smoothly. Then his old companion in arms and "bunkie" died, and his own troubles began, for the "bunkie" left $3,000 and Conroy was made his executor.

As the old soldier explained to the detectives, "high finances and army training were at variance, and somehow $2,000 disappeared."

Alarmed at the loss, Conroy decided to look up the old-time friends left behind in Ireland and ask their advice in finding the missing funds. Acting upon the thought, he left the home suddenly and took the trip. Once home among old friends Conroy almost forgot his financial difficulties. In the "pub" at Ballymoote were many willing ears to listen to tales of Indian fighting and life on the frontier.

One day the happy circle at the "Golden Crown" was rudely broken up. Two strangers wanted a word with "Uncle John." After much whispering, the old soldier decided to fight, but the end was defeat for the old soldier, for Carter and Trumbo, the strangers, convinced the judiciary, the extradition papers were granted, and the old soldier was forced to return to explain about the missing money.

WED JUST BEFORE DEATH.

Chicago Theatre Manager Expires Twelve Hours After Marriage.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 28.—Twelve hours after his marriage to Miss Ray Neuman, Robert E. Fulton, owner of the Trocadero and Folly Theatres, died early this morning. His bride was formerly treasurer of the Trocadero.

The marriage was arranged many weeks ago, but the condition of Fulton's health made it necessary to postpone the ceremony. During the last three months he has been ill with a complication of diseases. When Fulton's failing health made his death appear inevitable he decided to delay the marriage no longer. A minister was called in and the ceremony was performed in his apartments.

ATLANTIC SIGHTED AHEAD OF HAMBURG

American Liner Passes Her 21 Hours in the Lead.

ST. PAUL SAW THE UTOWANA

Capt. Passow Explains Mistake When His Steamer Reaches Port—Was Minnehaha's Report.

The American liner Marion, arriving at Philadelphia late last night, reports the Atlantic on Tuesday, May 23, at 1 o'clock, 1,340 miles east of Sandy Hook. Twenty-one hours after that the Hamburg was seen in the same position by the Celtic, showing that the Atlantic could not have been where the Minnehaha reported her and has been leading all the time.

Capt. J. H. Hill says he sighted three of the yachts that are racing across the Atlantic Ocean. On Tuesday, May 23, at 1 P. M., the steamer sighted the black three-masted schooner Atlantic, steering east, 1,340 miles east of Sandy Hook. At 4 P. M. a yacht resembling the Sunbeam was sighted to the northward 1,300 miles east of Sandy Hook. At midnight the steamer exchanged signals with the Valhalla 1,180 miles east of Sandy Hook. A light wind from the southwest prevailed during that day and evening. The first two racers were going at a good clip.

The Atlantic is leading the race for the Kaiser's Cup by from two to three hundred knots, in all probability. The Hildegarde, though not reported since the first day, unless the unidentified boat seen by the Haversham Grange be she, as seems likely, is possibly second. Fifty knots behind is the Hamburg, which is leading the vanguard of the other racers, with Ailsa at her heels. The others following are Valhalla, Endymion, Fleur de Lys, Utowana, Thistle, Apache, and Sunbeam, as nearly as can be figured out.

The latest reports received from each up to midnight last are as follows:

Yacht.	Hours.	Lon.	Lat.	Dist.	Aver.
Atlantic	145	..	..	1,340	9.3
Reported by Marion.
Hildegarde	101	55.42	40.24	843	8.4
Reported by Havarsham Grange (doubtful.)
Valhalla	174	42.50	42.50	1,440	..
Reported by Hamburg (doubtful.)
Hamburg	172	42.21	43.08	1,464	8.5
Reported by Hamburg.
Ailsa	151	47.58	40.47	1,196	7.8
Reported by British King.
Endymion	172	43.45	42.20	1,355	8.0
Reported by St. Paul.
Fleur de Lys	152	48.15	40.47	1,183	7.8
Reported by British King.
Utowana	176	45.02	41.40	1,325	7.5
Reported by St. Paul.
Thistle	124	54.26	40.15	909	7.3
Reported by Lucania (doubtful.)
Apache	160	51.30	42.10	1,040	6.5
Reported by Tuscarora (doubtful.)
Sunbeam	168	52.40	42.00	992	5.9
Reported by Tuscarora (doubtful.)

This is the information gained after consultation with Capt. Passow of the American liner St. Paul immediately after she docked at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and from the report of the Tuscarora after she arrived from London. The St. Paul had reported six of the boats in the race by wireless from Siasconsett on Saturday. There were discrepancies in her report that made any conclusion based upon it impossible. It was to clear these up that Capt. Passow was asked.

After carefully reading the dispatch he made three important changes in it, and then expressed opinions on the information since gained that led to the above deductions. The Captain worked over the positions for nearly an hour, and had all the information at hand at his command. The changed marconigram reads:

Associated Press, New York, Via Marconi Station, Siasconsett, Mass., May 27.

Minnehaha reports: Hamburg leading Ailsa by thirteen miles. Then came Endymion, Atlantic, Fleur de Lys, and Valhalla, long distance astern. Hanburg's position, May 23, 6:32 A. M., latitude 40.6, longitude 50.35.

We passed, May 24, 6:50 P. M. Greenwich time, Endymion, latitude 42.20, longitude 44.45; May 24, 10:25 P. M., supposed Atlantic, latitude 41.49, longitude 45.02. All well.

Endymion, 1,385 miles east of Sandy Hook Lightship. Supposed Atlantic 1,325 miles east of starting line. PASSOW, Captain.

This clears up the mystery absolutely. The Minnehaha's report was at hand on Friday. It said she had sighted the Atlantic behind the Fleur de Lys at midnight on May 22. She said nothing about the Endymion at all. The Atlantic had been previously reported by the Armenian at 3:30 o'clock on the afternoon of May 21 ninety-two miles west and sixty-three miles north of the Minnehaha's position. Navigators ridiculed the idea that in thirty-two and one-half hours the Atlantic would run only 110 miles in the conditions known to exist there, and that she would run sixty-three miles directly away from her goal in doing so. They figured that the boat, being sighted at midnight, had either been mistaken in the distance and darkness and was another three-master, or that the Endymion's signal had been mistaken for hers, inasmuch as the Endymion had been previously seen with the Ailsa and Hamburg by the St. Louis, while the Minnehaha herself picked up the other two immediately after.

As for the two boats sighted by the St. Paul, the omission of the word "supposed" that should have been included in Capt. Passow's message caused all the trouble. The Captain is now sure that it was the Utowana he saw. He said:

"It was dusk when we met her, 7:30 P. M. by ship's time, 10:25 P. M. by Greenwich time, and she was over twelve miles to the southward of us. We could see clearly that it was a racing yacht, a three-masted schooner, with a black hull, and we knew it was either the Atlantic or Utowana. We sent up our night signals to identify her when she answered, but we could not make out the signal at all in the slight mist and gathering darkness. We could see lights, but could not distinguish their color. What determined us in supposing it was the Atlantic was that we saw no blue star, which should have been sent up by the Utowana. Of course this might have missed fire, but the position quoted by Minnehaha seemed to argue that it was Capt. Barr's boat.

"From what I have seen since I should judge with the weather that the yachts have had that the Atlantic should have averaged at least 250 miles a day from Sunday to Wednesday, and that she was easily 1,600 miles out at that time, figuring from her position Sunday afternoon."

This would put her at least 200 miles ahead of the Hamburg, as reported by the Celtic on Wednesday, the 24th, at 11 in the morning. Two hours later the Celtic passed the Endymion thirty-five miles behind, besides the distance the yachts had gone in the time, probably fifty miles all told. The St. Paul picked up the Endymion still four hours later, and passed the Utowana, according to the steamer's calculation, 13 miles astern of the Endymion.

At the same time that the St. Paul sighted the Endymion the steamer Hamburg reported the German yacht of the same name, 79 miles ahead. Two hours later the steamer picked up the Valhalla in latitude 42.50, longitude 42.50, if Capt. Burmeister's figures have been correctly reported. This would put her ahead of the Endymion and within 41 miles of the Hamburg, allowing for the difference of time. The position seems unlikely. The report says:

On May 24, 4:10 P. M., in latitude 43.08, longitude 42.21, Capt. Burmeister reports a two-masted schooner yacht with black hull. She was carrying foresail, mainsail, jib, and staysail. The wind was from the south, blowing a moderate gale, and the sea was rough. The yacht was two miles to the north. Capt. Burmeister expressed the belief that the vessel was the Endymion, but later it proved to be the Hamburg.

The British yacht Valhalla was passed by the steamer Hamburg on May 24 at 6:20 P. M. Her position was latitude 42.50, longitude 42.50. The steamer was 50 metres from the yacht. The wind was from the south-southwest, blowing a strong breeze. The sea was rough and the weather rainy.

The Ailsa and Fleur de Lys are also reported within an hour of each other by the British King. They were together when reported by the Minnehaha, and are evidently keeping together, about the same distance separating them. Capt. O'Hagen's report reads:

On May 23, at 6:55 P. M., in latitude 40.47, longitude 47.58, passed an American yacht, painted white, ketch-rigged, mainmast and jigger. The vessel was the Ailsa. One hour later a two-masted schooner-rigged yacht was passed. This is thought to be the Fleur de Lys.

THE CELTIC GREETED YACHTS.

Her Passengers in Eager for News of the Race They Saw.

All that the passengers on the White Star Line steamer Celtic could talk about on their arrival yesterday afternoon, was the ocean yacht race. On Wednesday, May 24, they passed the Hamburg and Endymion, the two yachts supposed to be the leaders in the race. The two came within easy distance of the Celtic's passengers, presenting two beautiful pictures as they flew under full sail, every inch of canvas being spread to catch a fresh southerly breeze.

The Hamburg was the first yacht seen. At 11:29 A. M., Greenwich time, and 8:30 A. M., ship's time, she was in latitude 42.18 and longitude 44.25, or almost 1,337 miles east of Sandy Hook Lightship. The news spread among passengers and crew, and every inch of space along the vessel's port side was lined with enthusiastic spectators. She passed within three miles of the Celtic, on the starboard tack, making fast time.

While the whole ship was still talking yachts and yacht race the Endymion was sighted. Capt. Ranson records her as passing at 1:44 P. M., Greenwich time, 10:28 A. M., ship's time, or just two hours later. Again the word was passed, and the Endymion was treated to the same cheering and salutes of waving flags and handkerchiefs.

So successful were the wireless connections that the Campania, westward bound, was able to report the Celtic's news to the Siasconset station at Nantucket last Friday, and when the Celtic reached Quarantine yesterday they were surprised to see the tale in print.

Among the Celtic's passengers were the Rev. C. H. Bixby, Senor Don Jose G. Cifuente, the Rt. Rev. Leighton Coleman, Bishop of Delaware; Lieut. Col. Hume-Grummond and Lady Georgina Hume-Drummond, E. E. Hanna, Joy Morton, brother of the Secretary of the Navy; Miss Helen Morton, and Sir R. Musgrave and Lady Musgrave.

SLAIN ON HER WAY TO CHURCH

Little Girl's Body Found in a Wood Near Oswego.

Special to The New York Times.

OSWEGO, N. Y., May 28.—The body of Cora Sweet, twelve years old, daughter of Henry Sweet, a farmer, living at Scriba, six miles east of this city, was found tonight in a wood a short distance from her home. Her skull was crushed with a large stone which was found near her body. Her clothing was torn and other marks of violence gave evidence of a terrible struggle.

The girl left her home at 10 o'clock this morning to attend service at the North Scriba Baptist Church, two miles distant. The country is being searched for the murderer.

MR. DAVIS ORDERED OUT.

Wanted to Speak Before Accepting the Rev. May Pepper's Challenges.

When the Rev. May S. Pepper began services in her Bedford Avenue Church, Brooklyn, last night she discovered in the congregation William S. Davis, a New York publisher, who has challenged her on previous occasions to submit to a private test of her alleged powers. She promptly invited Davis to join her on the platform in order to witness at close range the reading of a sealed letter, which is a standing feature of Miss Pepper's services. Mr. Davis replied that he would come on one condition—that he be permitted to address the congregation. The Rev. Pepper proudly replied that whatever talking was to be done in that church would be done by her alone.

One of the Trustees, A. S. McDonald, who was sitting near Mr. Davis, joined in the controversy by charging the publisher with being responsible for the circulars published about the church. The argument waxed warm for a few minutes, but further trouble was prevented by the interference of two other Trustees. Later Mr. Davis was told by William Rohds, one of the Trustees, to leave the church, as he was only disturbing the services. He left without protest.

WAR ON CONEY ROWDIES.

Seventy-five Prisoners Taken for Fighting on Cars and at Terminal.

Superintendent Dow Smith of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company made extensive preparations to suppress rowdyism on Coney Island cars yesterday, and by midnight his twenty-five special policemen had taken seventy-five prisoners.

The special policemen went to work at 7 o'clock in the evening when the crowds began to move homeward. They had trouble with crowds of young toughs who stood on the car tracks fighting and blocking the cars when they found they could not get seats.

Superintendent Smith, who commanded the railroad squad, said he would put a stop to rowdyism on the cars, no matter how many special policemen he had to employ. The Coney Island police made no attempts to assist the special men.

The prisoners were all young men, most of them well dressed. They all protested that they were injured persons, and declared they would sue the railroad company. One man arrested was accompanied by his wife. The railroad policemen said they found him fighting with two other men, and arrested all three. The man with his wife said he was simply protecting her from the insults of the other two when he was arrested. He said he was John Worth of 142 West Forty-ninth Street. The other men said they were John Kelly and Arthur Reid of 21 Hamilton Street, Albany. The Coney Island station was so crowded by midnight that there were as many as ten prisoners in a cell.

DRUGGIST FIGHTS THIEF.

Held Up in Store, He Throws Bottle at Man, Who Escapes.

About 11 o'clock last night a man entered August Zeller's drug store, at 940 Summit Avenue, Jersey City, and asked for toothache drops. As Zeller turned to take the bottle from the shelf the man covered him with a revolver, and ordered him to throw up his hands.

Zeller threw the bottle in the man's face, causing him to drop the revolver. Zeller then grappled with the man as he stooped to recover the pistol, and the two men struggled about the store until Zeller received a severe blow on the head from the butt of the revolver. Then his assailant escaped.

The police were summoned, but failed to find any trace of the man. He left behind him his hat, by which the police hope to identify him.

Pittsburg Easily Beaten and Three Players Put Out of Game.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 28.—The Cincinnati team gave the Pittsburgs a sound thrashing to-day, the ex-champions using three pitchers in an attempt to stop the advance of the local men. The visitors were evidently rattled at the manner in which the Cincinnatians began the game, and Umpire Emslie was obliged to use extreme measures to keep the Pittsburgs in order. Wagner was put off the field for using offensive language, and Second Baseman Huggins and Pitcher Leever were sent to the bench for disputing decisions. The fielding of both teams was rather ragged, but the batting of the local men carried them to victory.

After Phillippi had been knocked out of the box in the second inning and Leever put out of the game, Howard, the outfielder, was selected to pitch, and he acquitted himself very creditably. The score:

Jersey City Scores in Only One Inning and Beats Newark.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., May 28.—Jersey City defeated Newark in the eighth inning to-day, the score being 3 to 2. It was done in this way: Bean and Keister singled and Merritt walked, filling the bases. Halligan fouled to Cockman, Cassidy walked, forcing Bean home. Pfanmiller struck out. Vandergrift singled, scoring Keister and Merritt, and Mack struck out. Newark scored in the first inning on singles by Mahling, Cockman, and Jones, and in the third on Swander's single and a steal and Mahling's single. Mack was substituted for Lindeman by Jersey City in the fourth inning. The score:

THE SEA FIGHT.

At the present writing there is little doubt that an important naval battle took place on Saturday between the Russian and Japanese fleets in the Straits of Korea, and the weight of evidence is to the effect that the Japanese seriously crippled the Russians. This conclusion rests on The Associated Press report of a telegram from the United States Consul at Nagasaki and on another from Washington giving details as to the same event described in the Nagasaki dispatch. Later news may confirm or discredit this view of the situation.

Meanwhile it is to be noted that the excitement in this city was extreme, surpassing any manifested since the Cuban war and more general even than that shown over any of the happenings in the Boer war. While the general sympathy was undoubtedly with the Japanese, there was a frank feeling of sincere pity for the Russians, who are bravely, if uselessly, fighting in what many of them believe to be an unnecessary and unjustifiable war.

PHILADELPHIA.

There has not in a long time been so complete and impressive a surrender by political corruptionists to the force of aroused public indignation as that of the Republican organization in Philadelphia.

And it is the more noteworthy because the victory for decency was won by a man, Mayor WEAVER, chosen by the Ring to carry out its plans, one who was not unwilling to carry them out within any ordinary limits. He rebelled because the Ring went too far, and when he rebelled, he trained on the Ring the very guns they had relied on to defend themselves. He was backed by a tremendous public sentiment and he could not have won without it. But he actually won by the vigor and firmness with which he attacked the stronghold of patronage. It is a curious situation, but one full of hope, because it shows that in the long run the moral fibre of even the ordinary politician is sounder than the reckless corruptionists reckon it to be.

THE RIGHTS OF PROPERTY.

The right and the power of control, unless restricted by the owner's act or by operation of law, are elements and attributes of property.

The charter of a stock corporation is, as between the corporation and its stockholders and as to the stockholders inter sese, an executed contract; it is a continuing grant of corporate power, and all applicable provisions of a general law under which a corporation has been formed, not expressly set forth in its certificate or articles of incorporation, are to be read into and taken to be a part of its charter.

These statements of law are taken from the opinion of Judge MADDOX in the Equitable case. They have a timeliness and a pertinency to public questions and issues more momentous even than those involved in the Equitable controversy that make them fit subjects of thought and examination by all sorts of men.

If it had been the intent of the makers of our statute law that the owner of shares of the capital stock of a corporation should be possessed of no rights not readily extinguishable by executive decree, judicial decision, or legislative act, they would have enacted that ownership of stock should be held to confer power of control over the business of corporations only until such time as the transfer of that power to somebody else should be demanded in public harangues or mass meeting resolutions.

If human experience and the relation of men with their fellows had demonstrated that the private ownership of any form of property was a mistake and a wrong, laws and Constitutions, hundreds of years back, would have decreed that everything should be given to everybody, and the principles of the common law would never have become the shield of a plutocracy of farmers, bankers, mill owners, shoemakers, capitalists, and savings bank depositors insolently attempting to guard their own against the forays of demagogues and Socialists.

If the grant of corporate power had in its origin conformed to modern notions it would have been laid down that the provisions of all general laws in existence at the time of incorporation or subsequently enacted should be read into the charter wherever they tended to make it null and void, but should have no application if they had the effect of establishing and maintaining stockholders' rights of control over their own property.

In short, if our Constitutions, our laws, our customs, and our prescriptions had sprung from the minds of municipal ownership theorists and Federal rate fixers Judge MADDOX would have rendered himself liable to impeachment by enunciating the doctrine that the right and the power of control are elements and attributes of property, and that the charter of a corporation is a continuing grant of power.

FAIRBANKS AND SHAW.

"No one is authorized to say that I will be a candidate for the Presidency," protested Secretary SHAW to an inquisitive newspaper man at Des Moines; "it is a subject which I do not care even to discuss."

Why should he discuss it? Leave that to the tempestuous and irresistible enthusiasm of his fellow-citizens. The leaf borne upon the wings of the wind has no need to argue the matter. The compelling hand of Destiny has been laid upon the shoulder of Mr. SHAW. The people have gone wild about him. They have discussed the subject to a finish, and their minds are made up.

Still, given his present orbit and velocity, SHAW is sure to collide with FAIRBANKS. In the love and affection of the people the collision has already occurred. The heart of the Nation is divided. When the people looked on FAIRBANKS they were his by an indefeasible allegiance until they caught sight of SHAW. What other country can show a competition of greatness and of talent so bewildering to the electorate? Upon the serene brow of SHAW Heaven has set the visible symbols of cloud-topping intellectual eminence. From the great eyes of FAIRBANKS there radiates the splendor of a matchless mind. When SHAW speaks the Nation attends as the ripe fruits of his thought fall multitudinously into the extended baskets of its understanding. Let FAIRBANKS open his mouth and the people scramble for the best places in order that they may miss no word that falls from the lips of probably the greatest thinker of the age.

Then, too, the lustre of their statesmanship is matched by the genial glow of their temperaments and dispositions. They are whole-souled men, big-hearted, radiant, engaging, and approachable. If SHAW is a popular idol, FAIRBANKS is a National inspiration.

To no American of native birth is it forbidden to aspire to and covet the chair behind that big desk in the White House. "If POLK got there why not I?" asks SHAW. "Am I not as big a man as FRANKLIN PIERCE?" demands FAIRBANKS. And no man will say them nay. WEAVER ran, DEBS ran, WHARTON BARKER ran, BRYAN is always running, and they made Kit Sly, the tinker, lord of the manor. Shall these be chosen in convention and SHAW and FAIRBANKS left?

What was it that WEBSTER said, or would have said? "I know not what others may say, but as for me, give me FAIRBANKS or give me SHAW. Mine hour is almost come, but these two abide with you. You cannot lose them. God grant that on my vision there may never rise the spectacle of a land unfairbanksed and shawless. Could I have made that great speech of SHAW'S in which he said that the American people would be willing to build a Panama Canal every other Thursday and never mind the expense provided the stuff and the tools were bought at high home prices I would cheerfully have lost the Dartmouth College case, I would have let HAYNE go unanswered, and would have invited CALHOUN to dinner. Toujours FAIRBANKS! Toujours SHAW! Hoch sollen sie leben!"

"My only regret," said MADISON, as he surveyed the completed Constitution, "is that we didn't provide two Presidencies, one for SHAW and one for FAIRBANKS."

THREE "NEW FORCES."

When a system of taxation is radically unjust, devised for the enrichment of the few at the expense of the many, and opposed to that freedom in which all interests find their greatest safety, it is not unreasonable to think that, in the long run, its defects and its vices will become plain to the common people and it will be abandoned. This, as our readers are aware, is the view which THE TIMES has for many years felt compelled to take about the so-called protective tariff. It begins to look as if this view would be justified by events more promptly than, for a long time, we should have deemed possible.

Here, for example, is The Tribune, "founded by HORACE GREELEY," deriving its economic gospel from HENRY CLAY and HENRY C. CAREY, the one-time organ, in the strictest sense, of the protectionist element in the Republican Party reciting in its Washington dispatches the appearance of "new forces" steadily tending to unite for the gradual breaking down of tariff barriers to trade with foreign countries. First there is the force exerted by the monopolies built up under the protective tariff. Glance at The Tribune's description of this phenomenon:

> In the estimation of many of the ablest managers of protected industries the protection now afforded by the Dingley act is so great in some cases as to induce inordinate competition, with the result that large concerns, whose business is menaced by the continual organization of small competitors, are compelled to absorb the little fellows at extravagant valuations.
> Attracted by the alluring possibilities of profit, in an overprotected industry, men with limited capital, and frequently with limited experience, are constantly tempted to invade that industry. If permitted gradually to approach and finally to arrive at insolvency they will inevitably, under pressure of financial stress, demoralize the market and entail serious losses on their more solid contemporaries. To avoid this result it is the custom of the larger concerns to buy out their smaller competitors, even though compelled to buy at an overvaluation the little fellow's plant.
> When it becomes necessary for a large concern to buy up a small competitor it is the custom to place on the market a new issue of stock, or bonds, with which to raise the funds for the purchase, and in this way the interests of the original stockholders are seriously menaced by the constant danger of overcapitalization, so that it is invariably the unfortunate stockholder who suffers in the end.

Monopoly on the one hand, rash competition, artificially stimulated, on the other; these are the results predicted from the ultra-protectionist tariff legislation by THE TIMES, since the effort under President ARTHUR to reduce the tariff ended in raising the average rates. The results are now showing on the ledgers of the trusts, and every wild venture that they have to buy up emphasizes the inevitable operation of the unwholesome protectionist plan.

Next comes the force tending to tariff reduction exerted by the railway corporations. This shows itself in two directions. First, in the increased cost of steel rails at home due to the heavy taxation of all foreign competition, while the trust is meeting that competition in markets abroad. Listen to The Tribune on this point:

> Recent exposures of the prices demanded of the Panama Canal Commission and of the regular sale to foreigners of domestic productions at prices far below those demanded of Americans have almost invariably had to do with articles enumerated in the steel schedule. One of the strongest arguments advanced by advocates of readjustment has been the exorbitant price which American railroads are compelled to pay for steel rails, as opposed to the price at which their competitors on the northern side of the Canadian boundary are supplied with the same essential of railway construction.
> Under these circumstances, it is generally believed that the next Congress will be subjected to powerful pressure from railway sources materially to reduce the tariff on steel. Mr. SCHWAB'S remark that steel rails can be produced for $12 a ton will be extensively quoted, and men who have stood "pat" for almost a generation will be compelled to yield to the arguments of the railroads and advocate legislation which will relieve the railways from the present high prices which they are compelled to pay to the steel industry.

Incidentally there is another motive for anti-tariff influence by the railways. For a couple of years the beneficiaries of the tariff have been fighting against reduction by pressing the President to concentrate his energies upon the regulation of railway charges. The trick has wonderfully succeeded. The railway men resent it. Now that there is a chance—due to the canal episode—to counter on their foes, they are, according to The Tribune, ready to do so.

Finally, there is a third force tending to urge the President in the direction of a reduction of the tariff and a change in the manner of imposing it. This is the conviction of leading Republicans, especially in the Senate, that a new plan is needed to meet the action of foreign countries in retaliation for the excessive unfriendliness of our tariff toward their trade. At present the Senators cited by The Tribune as most interested in this change are Messrs. ALDRICH, LODGE, and SPOONER. They are the strongest Republicans in the Senate. They look first toward the "dual" plan, high rates for all, with low rates for those who will favor our exports. The plan has some difficulties and complexities. It may not work as its new friends think. But what is significant is that Republican leaders are studying it as a means of making a break in the tariff barrier. If the end cannot be reached by this path, others will be opened up. The Tribune, apparently, will be a zealous advocate. And it predicts—time will tell how correctly—that the President will lead the way.

WHERE IT HURTS.

The Philadelphia Councilman who came to Mayor WEAVER'S support because he could not stand it to have his little girls tormented with the cry, "Your father's a gas thief," is not exactly a pattern of public virtue, but he can be understood.

"Nothing on earth you could have done would have made me break with DURHAM," he told the Mayor. Undoubtedly his sense of loyalty to the party boss was as sincere, and, in his eyes, as obligatory as the loyalty of a Highlander to the chief of his clan was to him who felt it in the old days. In each case the leader might be a thief and the service of the follower might be an outrage on the community, a violation of the cardinal principle of a decent society, deserving punishment rather than reward or praise. But in each case also there was the sense of fealty on the part of the spearman for the wearer of a sword, of the fighter in the ranks toward the actual and natural leader. Between themselves men of this stamp may show real honor, though their standard of general civic morals is base.

When they come face to face with the just wrath and scorn of those whose rights they have violated, it hurts. It ought to hurt. It will do good in proportion to the pain experienced. There is no other way in which the doers of this class of wrongs can be made to understand the true nature of their conduct. Or, if they cannot be taught to see how contemptible their actions are, they can at least be taught to feel how contemptible their own neighbors think them to be.

HIGH RAILWAY SPEEDS.

A study of the net results of the German experiments on the Berlin-Zossen Railway with trains electrically propelled at high velocity appears to have led thoughtful railway men to the conclusion that any attempts to force train acceleration on steam railroads would be destructive of rolling stock and permanent way, and incidentally of passengers and train crews. As pointed out in the paper of Dr. FREDERICK SCHULTZ before the International Railway Congress, the best type of modern railway equipment can be operated safely at speeds of more than 100 miles an hour, provided a clear way can be assured.

This is exactly the difficulty which it would not seem possible to overcome in a railroad operated for a mixed traffic. At a speed of 100 miles an hour, unless the weather is quite clear, track signals cannot be distinguished clearly enough to be read with certainty. This means that a railroad devoted to very high speeds would need to be divided into long blocks, and before a train entered upon a block its conductor must know that the road is clear. Such blocks would need to be approximately a hundred miles long, which means the surrender of every other kind of traffic which now keeps out of the way of fast trains by taking sidings or otherwise temporarily withdrawing itself from the track which belongs to the "flyer." As a matter of fact, this would mean separate tracks for the high-speed trains, over or under the other tracks, with absolutely no grade crossings, and no points or switches by which slower moving trains could have access to such tracks. Anything like a coincident movement of freight and passenger traffic would be impossible. Such an accident as that on the Pennsylvania Railroad at South Harrisburg, caused by the pushing of a dynamite car across the track in front of a fast passenger train, must be guarded against by making sure that freight cars, whether carrying dynamite or not, cannot get in the way of passenger trains.

That no steam railroad could profitably build and maintain a separate permanent way for fast passenger trains would not seem to be questionable. Perhaps electric railroads with no requirements in the matter of freight handling, no through traffic arrangements, no strange cars to be hauled, and no necessary involvement of schedules, could do so in special instances and earn operating expenses; but even that is not certain. The Electrical Review says on this subject:

> There is no doubt that a safe high-speed road connecting the largest cities would get the greater part of the through passenger traffic, but whether we are quite ready for it is not so sure. The large railroads of this country are at the present time carrying out, or planning to carry out, some very remarkable and expensive work, and they will feel some hesitation toward undertaking what will be something of an experiment. On the other hand, if they delay too long they may find that the electric roads have forestalled them, and that their through traffic is being reduced as seriously as their short-haul traffic has been cut down by the suburban electric roads. We wonder if the railway Presidents do not often wish that the electric motor had never been invented.

We doubt if the wise railroad man has any such feeling. He is probably quite willing the electrical engineer shall have a monopoly of speeds according to the Berlin-Zossen standards. The large expenditures he is now making have much saner objects.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

New Light on Dr. Osler.

There appears in The Medical Record a farewell to Dr. WILLIAM OSLER which shows a desire and an ability for careful discrimination—its accuracy, of course, is not for us to judge—that are almost invariably lacking in the "occasional" tribute of this kind. First calling attention to the fact that Dr. OSLER, despite his twenty years of residence here and the marked Americanism of his characteristics, has remained by deliberate choice the British subject he was by accident of birth, and therefore goes to England as the return of a loan, not as a gift, from the new land to the old, The Record credits him with doing more than any other man to make the hospital and medical school of Johns Hopkins what they are, and describes him as having been one of the most conspicuous members of his profession in the United States, and unquestionably the most popular. It also declares, however, that his pre-eminence rested on unusual literary ability, geniality, and lovable personal character—far from harsh criticism, indeed, and yet a little surprising, not to say shocking, to those who have thought and heard of him only as a great doctor. "As a medical practitioner and consultant," we read, Dr. OSLER "had many superiors, but as a medical writer he was facile princeps. There are others of his profession who rank higher in the literary world, for into the field of general literature he made few incursions, but in his ability to clothe the dry facts of medicine in a fascinating literary style which compels attention he has no equal. He is peculiarly happy in his addresses before graduating classes and medical assemblies, and there are few volumes of medico-literary essays more entertaining than the collection recently published under the title of 'Aequanimitas.' The charm of his writings is in the style perhaps more than in the substance, and his serious contributions to the advancement of medical science have been few, for though a student and investigator, his forte has lain rather in the presentation of medical truths than in the discovery of new facts." All this explains and justifies Dr. OSLER'S long and close connection with a school, and his present acceptance of a post which, however honorable and honor-conferring, would hardly have appealed to the OSLER of the common assumption. Perhaps if he had been better understood his now too famous jest about the uselessness of old men would not have been taken in almost angry earnest, by a public that rather prides itself on possessing an agile and delicate sense of humor, and the horrible verb "to oslerise" would not threaten, as it certainly does now, to outlast the memory of all his achievements—an injustice as cruel as blind fate ever worked.

A Great Wrong Set Right.

We gave envious praise the other day to The Richmond (Va.) News Leader for having applied to the mean, small fellows in North and South who make squalid little rows about the inclusiveness of Memorial Day exercises the delightful description of "invisible in war and invincible in peace." Recognizing the phrase as a familiar one, we took great pains to say that The News Leader had "fallen on" it for this use, not "invented" it, confidently expecting that to be enough to enable us safely to avoid the trouble of looking up the origin of the phrase and yet to show that we knew it to be an old one. The trick didn't work. Almost at once haughty correspondents of the kind that write on postal cards began to rain scorn upon us for an ignorance which they imagined to be much more nearly complete than it was, and, though not one of them could more than guess the name of him who first balanced "invisible in war" with "invincible in peace," they were all enormously delighted to tell "your usually well-informed paper" how grossly stupid it was for not knowing—more than they did. That was all in the day's work, and when waste-paper baskets run over there is always the floor, but the case has been rendered more serious by The News Leader itself, which also cannot understand the English language when caution or sloth has made the same a little obscure. It has an admirably sensitive conscience, however, and it is tortured by a fear lest our unfortunate paragraph should lead somebody to suspect that it had claimed, or even accepted, praise for the achievement of another. After the necessary remarks about "well-informed and well-edited," The News Leader says: "We wish THE TIMES was right, because the expression is one of the cleverest, strongest, and most biting ever uttered. Our impression is that BEN HILL of Georgia originated it. It was an outcome of one of the fiery debates in the Senate in the reconstruction days, or immediately following them, and has become historic. The News Leader failed to put quotation marks around it because we thought it was as familiar as the Golden Rule or any common line from Shakespeare. THE TIMES has our thanks for the real compliment conveyed in attributing to this newspaper a phrase so pregnant, but we cannot in conscience accept stolen goods or connive at the robbing of a dead man, however innocently the crime may be committed." Now everybody ought to be satisfied. We have confessed, apologized, and made reparation, and the country, as well as The News Leader, is quite safe.

Taking Big Chances.

DOWIE is remembered here with the kindness he deserves for giving New York one of its most amusing weeks—it was, as we remember, about that long before he became tiresome—and therefore there will be some fairly sincere regret at the news that "Elijah III." is not only going to invest something like $4,000,000 of other people's money in Mexican lands, but also intends to tap four extinct volcanoes for water with which to irrigate his new Eden. The investment of the money is, if not all right, at least right enough for most practical purposes, since the millions will come from persons who simply must be humbugged by somebody, and the inevitable task of divulsion would probably be performed by a worse man if DOWIE didn't undertake it. The tapping of the extinct volcanoes, however, is another matter, and it may easily end for DOWIE in a kind of disaster that would punish him rather more severely than he really deserves. For the extinct volcano, especially in Mexico, is about the most dangerous of all sleeping dogs, and if JOHN ALEXANDER ventures to make one job of waking four of them, the chances are large that something only too easily distinguishable—by his heirs—from an abundant flow of clear sparkling water will be his cruel reward. Still, though DOWIE would be missed, the grief for his loss would not be permanently inconsolable for anybody except the army of infuriated creditors which he is gradually accumulating, and it must be said that, whatever the results of tapping the four volcanoes the experiment would have a certain academic interest for us all.

"Too Much Operating."

From The London Telegraph.

BERLIN, May 17.—Prof. Dr. Ernst Schwenninger, leading physician of the great district hospital of Gross Lichterfelde, near Berlin, refers in his annual report to the subject of modern surgery in a manner which has created a sensation.

His conviction, he says, is that recourse is had to operations far too frequently nowadays. One disease after another is handed over to operative technique, and the way in which the physician is pushed on one side by the surgical handicraftsman does not seem to him right. Surgery, which sees nothing and knows nothing outside its own narrowly-staked-out province, forgets too often that other ways also lead to the goal.

"Step by step," continues Prof. Schwenninger, "the physician has had to give way before the more fortunate surgeon, whose success is more quickly evident, and we must today quietly look on while frensy celebrates triumphs where mechanism of the briefest and most generalising inference takes possession of superstitious spirits."

Among the proofs adduced in support of his point of view, the professor states: "The functions of the spleen and the office of the appendix are unknown to us. Therefore they are unnecessary organs, and we cut them out when anything is wrong with them."

Prof. Schweninger also deplores the modern system of specializing in the medical profession. The man, he says, who devotes all his power of work, all his knowledge and capabilities to the treatment of only the eyes, nose, ears, skin, nerves, or other organs, runs a risk of losing feeling, and hence the power to treat human beings. He ceases to be a physician, and becomes a virtuoso.

Canada Prepares to Arm.

From The London Mail.

The Dominion Government is about to enter upon the construction of gigantic military works in the city and district of Quebec, which will involve a very large expenditure in money, and at the same time add materially to the military strength of the country.

The Government, besides making extensive repairs to the citadel and existing fortifications, will overhaul the three forts at Point Levis, which are to be armed with long-range guns.

The most important work, however, undertaken by the Dominion Government is the construction of two forts at Beaumont, nine miles from Quebec, on the south shore.

These forts will be located at a point which will command a full view of both the north and south channels of the river, and when completed will have cost, it is said, about £600,000.

Work on these forts will be commenced in the course of next month; when the ground will be broken. On being completed these forts will be armed with long-range guns of the most modern pattern, which will sweep the St. Lawrence for many miles.

Zealous, but Inconsistent.

From Puck.

"You say his course was not quite satisfactory to the labor unions?"

"Why, no. He worked ten hours a day to secure the passage of an eight-hour law."

DEMAND FOR VOCAL TEACHING

The Speaking Voice Neglected in the Public Schools.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Now that the people of New York City have signified their wish to retain in the public schools the varied course of study, which certainly is more effective in developing character and capacity than the three R's alone, it is high time for them to begin to examine one of the details of this course. I refer to the teaching of vocal music.

Vocal music, properly taught, is of very great benefit to children; it brightens and broadens the mind immensely. But this subject is not well taught in New York. Much time and money are now wasted upon it, and the taxpayers are not getting what they ought to have. Many music teachers visit the schools and considerable classwork is done in sight reading; but few individuals acquire ability to read independently and understandingly, while the voices of teachers and children are often harsh and disagreeable in the extreme.

As for the speaking voices, no adequate method is employed to improve them, and the "American nasal twang" remains a by-word among the nations. There is absolutely no excuse for this. It is the business of the schools to train our voices properly, and there is a method of training, taught in some other places, which New Yorkers could and should have. It is not enough to say to a child: Speak softly. Voice repression is not voice training. The method referred to develops voices which are so strong and so sweet that the listener says: "How beautiful!" It makes all children able to sing and to become independent readers.

These criticisms and assertions are not made at random. They are easily substantiated, and many people are ready to defend them.

AN ADMIRER OF SWEET VOICES.

CITIZENS' UNION POSITION.

Current Events in Philadelphia as Bearing on Local Conditions.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have for years admired R. Fulton Cutting's quarter of a century's unselfish advocacy of non-partisan government of great cities, and while the people of Greater New York have twice carried it into effect it has not yet become the settled policy of a majority of its citizens.

But Mr. Cutting's untiring devotion to the non-partisan idea has not been in vain. The public sentiment created in its favor has grown so strong that even the present partisan Mayor of New York did not dare, on taking office, to entirely disregard it, as is shown by his appointment of a few high officials taken from the non-partisan administration of Mayor Low.

The present condition of Philadelphia and Chicago, to say nothing of New York, mirrors vividly and painfully the malign influence of partisan government in cities. The duty of the Citizens' Union is plain. It must stand by its colors—confer with favorably disposed political organizations about the ticket, but it must take the final responsibility of naming the candidates and leave it to the good citizens of New York to elect them. I am a Republican, and while some of those of my political faith have inclined toward a straight ticket, I believe nine-tenths of the Republicans of the City of New York would work for the candidates of the Citizens' Union. They have got over the idea of beating the worst people by dividing the best.

If New York is any improvement on Philadelphia or Chicago it is because of the existence among us of the firm attitude of the Citizens' Union, led by R. Fulton Cutting, in providing an opportunity to choose our municipal officers on the non-partisan principle. G. C.

NEW YORK'S RACE WITH LONDON

By 1930 Her Population Ought to be Equal to That of the British Capital's.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a recent editorial regarding the present and future population of New York, you omitted to consider the people on the New Jersey side. By the arbitrary State line they belong to another State, of course—but in computing the metropolis as a centre of population, say within a ten or fifteen mile radius of the New York City Hall, it is quite unjust to omit the New Jersey cities. The figures of the last national census gives Newark 246,000 in even figures; Jersey City, 206,000; Paterson, 105,000; Hoboken, 60,000—617,000; add 15 per cent. for five years growth, 90,000; total, 707,000.

This added to the supposed total for the five boroughs—four millions—will give nearly five millions for the metropolitan district—only a million and a half short of the London metropolitan city and police districts total.

Predictions are very fallible in these matters—but New York's chance to pass London by 1930 certainly appears good.

Window Boxes for Flowers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"Upper West Side," who complains through you of the order of the policeman to remove the window boxes from his windows, is right. He is permitted to place them there if securely fastened. The policeman was ignorant, impertinent, or —. He should report the matter to the officer's precinct commander. N. X.

Lessons of the War.

An "African Brigadier," writing to The London Standard, declares that the principle of Japanese attacks could not be used against German, French, or American troops. "Is it not a fact that the rifle in the hands of the Russian peasant soldiery was not utilized to the full extent of which it is capable in repelling an attack?

"The Russians were not able to use their fire adequately, with the result that the Japanese, counting upon this deficiency, stormed positions with masses, and received the terrible casualties of close-quarter work instead of the wholesale massacre which might have ensued if every foot of the advance had been covered by efficient rifle fire.

"Napoleon said that fire is everything; and the rest of small account. In the case of the Russians it was the fire that had been of small account; therefore let us have ample evidence that the lessons of the war are drawn from fairly normal conditions before we alter our methods. Personally I am of opinion that no attack in mass of any kind can survive efficient rifle fire."

Collected Toll on Live Stock.

From Harper's Weekly.

On one of the old turnpikes yet remaining in the South a big touring car had twice rushed through the gate without paying toll. The third time they made the attempt the negro toll-man shut his gate and brought them to a stand. With indignation the half dozen occupants of the car declared they were entitled to ride free.

"Look at your own board," said the spokesman. "It says, 'Every carriage, cart, or wagon drawn by one beast, 2 cents; every additional beast, 2 cents.' We're not drawn by any beast at all."

"No; but here's where ye come in, Sah," replied the darky, pointing to another clause, as follows: 'Every half dozen hogs, 4 cents.' An' three times four is twelve," he added.

The twelve cents was paid.

"GRANTED" OR "DELEGATED."

The Nub of the Constitutional Question Involved in Secession.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"R. E. K.'s" letter in your issue to-day appeals for tolerance for the motives of the Southern leaders in antebellum days. Every one concedes the honesty of the South. But if "R. E. K." will get Mr. Currie's work in a public library and compare the Federal and Confederacy Constitutions his eyes will be opened to one truth that will make him do some thinking. The doctrine of the school of statesmanship south of Mason and Dixon's line was that the Union could be dissolved at will. The Constitution adopted by the Confederate statesmen, however, would seem to indicate that they had some misgivings on that point.

The whole question of constitutional interpretation turned on not whether the Union ought to be dissolved, but whether it might legally be ended by the "withdrawal" of any State or of more than one at will, the contention being that the powers that were "delegated" by the States could be withdrawn at pleasure by the State that delegated them. The Federal Constitution declares that "the legislative powers herein granted," &c. Apparently recognizing the force of the word "grant," the framers of the Confederacy's Constitution substituted the word "delegated" in theirs. A thing granted becomes the property of the grantee. A power delegated is recoverable.

The framers of the latter Constitution adhered to the framework and scope of the Federal Constitution, because they loved it, as Mr. Currie says, except in such particulars as suited their school of thought and their institution of slavery. In the fundamental and radical difference between the meanings of the words "granted" and "delegated," recognized by the Southern statesmen, lies the nub of the question. E. R. DODGE.

PEOPLE WHO DROP THEIR "H'S."

Educated Americans Said to be Just as Culpable as Cockneys.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a communication which appeared in last Sunday's TIMES it was asserted that nine-tenths of all Englishmen drop their "h's." Without discussing this doubtful statement, it may be well to remark that, so far as my knowledge goes, it seems never to have dawned upon the mind of the Englishman or American that the American, educated or uneducated, drops his "h's" too, that is, to a certain extent. He is constantly doing it. You cannot listen to the speech of the average American five minutes without noting the fact that he drops the "h's" of certain words at least a score of times.

In proof of it a few of many instances can be given in such sentences as these: I told 'em so. What did 'e say? Did you see 'em? Did you see 'er? What did 'is father say? Had 'e told me I'd 'ave done it. She took 'er hat and gave it to 'im. The American, also, frequently drops the "th" of the word "them," as in the sentence, Come in and see how fast we sell 'em.

Not only does he drop the initial "h," but he drops the imbedded "h" as well in more than one hundred words beginning with "wh." Nine-tenths of Americans, educated or uneducated, do this. An amusing circumstance in connection with this subject is the fact that frequently the American cartoonist in giving sentences intended to show how the Englishman drops his "h's" makes him drop them in just the same way the American does.

In conclusion it may be said that the idea entertained by many Americans that all Englishmen drop their "h's," that is, in the popular sense, is no more true than the idea entertained by many Englishmen that all Americans speak with a nasal twang. W. N. W.

An Example to be Copied.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Both THE TIMES and the public, more especially the policy holders (myself one of them) of the New York Life Insurance Company, are to be congratulated on your timely and exclusive news article this morning relative to the compensation and services of the officers of the New York Life Insurance Company. That is the sort of publicity which gives important news, inspires confidence, and is of sterling value amid a waste of sensationalism and trash.

The officers of big life insurance companies have responsibilities weightier, though more elastic, than those of bankers. Hence it is comforting to find at least one company which, while liberally compensating an administrative staff of conceded ability, shuts them off most rigorously from all collateral profit and speculation, while at the same time limiting its investments to high-class bonds and realty under most careful scrutiny and restriction.

If the example set by this company is followed by others, whether voluntarily or under legal duress, the public and our business methods will be gainers to an incalculable extent.

A Question for the President.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On the recent hunting trip of President Roosevelt, why did he select for use a rifle of foreign manufacture rather than one of American make—especially when world-famed sporting arms are built in our own country?

Won't a Winchester or a Savage kill an American bear as well as an Austrian Mannlicher? T. P. PECKHAM.

Whistler's Judgment.

From Harper's Weekly.

A Whistler story is told by friends of Miss Pamela Smith, the young American artist who has made a reputation abroad by her original work in color and black and white. Miss Smith's designs, while they show uncommon imagination, are technically crude, and a friend of hers who knew Whistler was anxious to get his opinion of them. She took a portfolio of Miss Smith's illustrations to the painter, and waited anxiously as Whistler examined them.

He looked them over carefully, and remarked, gruffly, "She can't paint."

Then he went through them again. "And she can't draw."

A third time he looked through the portfolio, pausing thoughtfully over each sketch.

"But she doesn't need to," he concluded.

FUTILITY.

I meant to bring thee roses:
As fair as those in dreams we grew,
And fairer far than ever blew
In sun-kissed fields before.
But Love alone disposes
Whenever man proposes—
Together we shall dream no more.

I meant to bring thee roses:
Some as thy spirit white, unstained;
Some deep-hued, as with blood ingrained,
Or flaming sunset red.
But Love alone disposes
Whenever man proposes—
Thy hopes, like mine, are cold and dead.

I meant to bring thee roses:
Their fragrance rare, poured on the fire
Of thy lone heart's long-hid desire,
Would soothe thy soul distraught.
But Love alone disposes
Whenever man proposes—
Some withered leaves were all I brought!

WEAVER, FOE OF RING, AND DURHAM, BOSS

Sketches of the Opposing Leaders in the Philadelphia Fight.

HOW MAYOR TURNED ON BOSSES

Had Been Held in Hatred and Contempt—Some Kindly Traits of the Organization Chief.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 28.—No two men could be more unlike than the two opposing leaders who have been fighting to a finish the most remarkable municipal battle in the history of American politics.

Durham, the defeated leader, is one of the shrewdest politicians in the country, even though his domain is restricted to local politics. Weaver, the victorious leader, behind whom all Philadelphia was ranked, is no politician at all, and for him Durham and all the ring had a contempt so profound and bottomless that it could not find its expression in words.

Durham is a quiet, silent, self-contained man. Weaver is a bubbling, effervescent, enthusiastic sort of person. Durham is a man who makes no pretenses at religion; Weaver is a great Sunday school man, and thereby hangs much of the tale of his revolt. For Weaver's break with the ring did not come until the clergymen and Sunday-school leaders of the city had denounced him bitterly as recreant. He had stood by the ring until that happened. When it did it nearly broke his heart.

Weaver has been in the limelight for so short a time so far as the country at large is concerned, that his character and his true relations with the ring are not generally understood. When the limelight came his way he was in the act of smashing the ring, and it is as a ring-smasher that the country knows him. As a fact, he was for two years, a full half of his term, a ring Mayor.

A RING MAN BY COMPULSION.

But this is not to say that Weaver was ever a ring man in the full sense of the term. He writhed in his fetters. He carried out the ring's bidding with bitter protest, because he had to. When he received his orders and obeyed them it was with such open disgust and anger that the ring that had elected him hated him. For a year past no ring man has ever referred to him by name. There is an unprintable epithet that has been set apart by the ring for Weaver, and when a ring man speaks of him it is always by this epithet.

The fact that he loathed the ring, and yet carried out its orders, led it to make the huge mistake of thinking that he was a contemptible puppet, from whom there was nothing to fear. When the city officials went out to the opening of the St. Louis World's Fair in a special train no ring man would set foot in Weaver's car. In the buffet car was a picture of the Mayor, and no ring man was allowed to take a drink of liquor until he had spat on this picture.

All this time the ring was resting in profound security. It looked for no revolt from Weaver. But the Mayor was obeying orders merely because he could not find a chance to make a revolt with any hope of success. Probably he would have revolted long ago if there had been any chance of victory.

In choosing the time for his revolt he acted with a shrewdness that astounded the ring. He waited till the Legislature had adjourned. If he had revolted before a ripper bill would have been put through the Legislature in twenty-four hours, and Weaver would have been "ripped" out of office. Therefore Weaver bided his time.

RESISTLESS CAMPAIGN PLAN.

When he acted, even though he is no politician, his plan of campaign was something that could not be surpassed, and he acted with a decision that put the ring on the run from the start.

The fight was over the gas lease. First the Mayor announced that he would veto the lease, and then he removed from office the Director of Public Safety and the Director of Public Works. The former had nothing whatever to do with the gas works officially, and the latter had nothing to do with the lease. The blow was struck for the purpose of paralyzing the ring.

Every act of the Mayor's since he entered on the fight has been performed with an energy and promptness that have left the bewildered ring wondering if some doppelganger or changeling has not got into the shoes of the protesting but pliant Weaver they used to know and despise. Weaver does not resemble in any detail whatever the man the ring thought it knew so well.

The man who has done this thing is a short, ruddy Englishman with a chunky face. He has one of the biggest chins that ever completed a human face. He is so short that he is called "The little Mayor," but his figure is so square and chubby that he does not really look little, even to the medium-sized men who tower over him and to whom he has to raise his eyes when he talks. Down his jaw there runs a long and very deep gash, made in his youth by a man who was aiming a blow at some one else and caught the innocent bystander.

English-born, Weaver started at the bottom when he came to America as a boy. He was an errand boy, but he saved up enough to go to a business college and thus became a clerk. Then, as clerk, he saved up enough to go to a law school and become a lawyer.

But he was an unknown lawyer, a respectable but anonymous nobody when the ring took him up. Once he had joined an independent movement to best a ring Councilman for re-election, which had failed, but this aberration had been atoned for by a continuous regularity thereafter.

RING'S PLIGHT IN 1901.

The situation was serious for the ring in 1901. Rothermel, the able and uncompromising District Attorney, had prosecuted the ring's criminals in a way that gave great scandal to the organization and deep thankfulness to honest Philadelphians. He had even prosecuted Quay, and had astounded the ring by making a persevering effort to adorn that statesman with a suit of stripes. Salter, the ballot box stuffer, was in Mexico with his ear to the ground, waiting to be told when he could come back and be tried. It was painfully evident that Salter must remain an exile until Rothermel had been got out of the office.

Rothermel was renominated by a town meeting. The ring did not dare nominate one of its heelers, and yet must have a man who would do its bidding. Francis Shunk Brown recommended Weaver. Nobody knew who he was, and there was no danger of any one saying anything against him.

Durham had never seen him, never heard of him. "Who is Weaver" became the rallying cry of the independents. There is no doubt whatever that Rothermel was elected that year and counted out. The number of fictitious ballots cast by the ring at every election, which must be overcome before the reform majority can begin to be counted, is variously estimated at from 40,000 to 70,000. Weaver's alleged majority was 44,000.

Durham did not make many demands on Weaver, and the few he did make were granted. When he was nominated for Mayor in 1903 the ring did not expect any trouble with him. But the demands made on the Mayor were different from those made on the District Attorney. The man with the square jaw found himself a puppet, not one act of whose official life was dictated by himself. He grew restive almost immediately, and as time went on his chains grew unendurable to him. There was an audible clank and rattle of them every time he signed his name by Durham's orders to an official paper.

Now he has beaten Durham down to his knees. He has done it not alone by revolting, but by revolting at precisely the right time and striking just the blows that go to the solar plexus. The ring hates him as bitterly as ever, but it does not despise him now.

DURHAM THE BOSS.

The man whose power has been so shattered is far from being a detestable character as bosses go. The human side of Durham, beneath his brutality as a boss, makes him a more engaging figure than Croker was, for instance. There is about him a good deal of the charm which bound men to Tweed.

He was the practical creator of the present organization, which is quite a new thing. In days not long gone by the town was ruled by the Hog Combine, of which State Senator David Martin was the head, a ring which was infantile compared with Durham's. The Hog Combine never dreamed of the far-reaching grip which Durham has fastened on every department of human life in Philadelphia.

Under the Hog Combine a ward leader led his ward. Durham's organization has nullified the ward leader and concentrated all power in the boss's hands. Under the Hog Combine the ward leader was consulted in the plans of the organization, and his voice was potent. Under Durham nothing of the kind is known.

In the days of the Hog Combine Councilmen were allowed to speak on the floor. Now, if a Councilman wishes to speak, he must first go to Seger, if he is a Select Councilman, or Hammond, if he is a Common Councilman, and obtain permission. Seger and Hammond are designated by Durham for this purpose, and they are called "the whips of Councils."

Durham's machine subsists, practically, on the funds raised by office holders. All of such holders belong to the ring, and a specified portion of the salary of each is set apart for the organization. Durham decides the distribution of this immense fund. No one would dare question his distribution or even ask what had been done with the money. Durham's will is law.

The whole Government of Philadelphia, prior to Weaver's revolt, was located on the eleventh floor of the Betz Building, where Durham has his office. He goes there every day and issues orders for the government of the city. Contractors go there to ask that city contracts be given them, officials to have their duty in the day's work decided for them, politicians to ask for decisions on patronage. It is all done perfectly openly and above board.

They are waiting for Durham on the street, and he is held up and buttonholed before he can enter the building. He stands there with immovable patience, deciding each case in a few words, until he has dismissed them all, and then goes up to his office, where he finds another crowd awaiting him, and where he enters upon his duties as governor of the city and plans out the day's work.

His decision in each case is irrevocable and cannot be appealed. Durham never lies. That and his patience are strong factors in his personal popularity. In answer to a request for a position he will say, in his calm and passionless manner, "No, I can't give you that," and that ends it. There is no protest, for Durham never decides from whim and cannot be moved from a decision.

After an energetic search for a single instance in which the boss ever told an untruth, the following has been brought to light as the only case on record. A reporter, meeting Durham in a railroad ticket office, asked him how a certain appointment had been decided.

"Blank will get the position," replied Durham, passing on to his train. The reporter dashed off to telephone his office and give the news. While he was in the act Durham appeared.

"I told you an untruth," said Durham. "Blank will not get the job."

He missed his train to save the reporter from suffering the consequences of the falsehood he had told.

GRANTED PRIEST'S REQUEST.

Durham's audiences are not limited to politicians, contractors, or officials. In all walks of life men go to the omnipotent Boss to get him to dispense blessings. A priest went to the Betz Building one day and said that in his parish was a woman who was a morphine victim. She had three children, and the church was caring for them, but the priest wanted Durham to send the mother to a hospital which had made a reputation for curing such cases.

"Why don't you see the hospital authorities?" said Durham.

"The woman hasn't any money," replied the priest, "and the hospital authorities wouldn't take her without it."

"Oh, that's different," said the boss. "I'll see that they take her," and he did.

Some time ago a case which attracted a good deal of attention was that of a very young girl who was left an orphan with five still smaller brothers and sisters, whom she was trying desperately to support. Durham, who was at Lake Placid, heard about it and telegraphed to Capt. Erb, his secretary:

"Give that girl $200 for me and make everybody who comes in my office give up, too."

That day was a sad one for Durham's callers. Erb obeyed orders with literal exactness.

A church member learned that a saloon was to be established next door to his house. He could not afford to move, and was in despair. One of his neighbors was a ring official, to whom he told his predicament.

"I'll see Durham about it," said the official.

"He wouldn't help me," replied the man with the endangered home. "I always voted against you people."

The official came back two days later and said, "Durham has ordered those people to move two blocks up the street, where the people really need a saloon."

So, during the anthracite coal strike Durham's chief lieutenant, McNichol, got a small quantity of coal and ordered his sub-bosses to deliver it to the worthy people in the ward. When they came in to report McNichol asked if a certain widow had received any of the coal.

"No, and she won't," replied the heeler. "She has two sons who are against the organization."

"Are you going to put me to the trouble of taking that coal over there myself?" asked McNichol. The coal was delivered.

The complete downfall of Durham at the next election and the shattering of his great organization are made immediately probable by the present situation. The ring holds office through its ability to count out any reform candidate who may be elected, as Rothermel was counted out. By taking the Directorship of Public Safety away from the ring Weaver has detached the police from the organization, and without the police the fraudulent election cannot be held. The outlook is therefore very strong that at the next election the gang will be broken to pieces.

Then it will take its place in history as one of the most extraordinary governments that ever ruled an American city. There is no machine anywhere quite like it.

MR. M'COY, ENGAGED, NOW READS CHAUCER

Tennyson, Longfellow and Browning Also Delight the Pugilist.

MANY ASK HIM FOR LOANS

Hearing That Mrs. Ellis, His Bride-to-Be, Has $5,000,000—He and She Discuss Matters.

"Kid" McCoy, the pugilist, was awakened early yesterday morning by friends who had learned of his engagement to Mrs. Lillian Estelle Earle Ellis, the young widow of Edward S. Ellis. Mr. Ellis was a grandson of the Schenectady locomotive builder, and his widow is said to have inherited from him a fortune of from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000. Every friend, according to McCoy, was desirous of negotiating a small loan from McCoy, who avers that he doesn't know whether Mrs. Ellis has $500, and doesn't care, either.

"Before I had finished my toilet," he said last night, in his apartments in the Dunlop Hotel, "I had been touched for over a million dollars by fellows who were congratulating me over the 'phone. Things were coming so fast that after breakfast Mrs. Ellis and myself took a walk around the reservoir in Central Park. Then we went to White Plains for lunch in one of her automobiles—she has two, one an 80-horse power and the other a 40-horse power machine. We've just got back.

"It's true that we are engaged and that we are going to get married very shortly. If you want to say anything about me, you may say that I have been a changed man ever since Christmas. I haven't taken a drink and am not thinking fight any more. As a matter of fact I have taken to reading. I am very fond of my books now. My Chaucer, Tennyson, Longfellow, and Browning are great sources of delight to me. Poetry is fine.

"I can't say just when we will be married. It all depends on certain matters which have to be settled. We are both of us free to wed, but there are some things which have to be attended to first. We won't waste any time."

"That is very true," said Mrs. Ellis. "If anybody has any knocks to register against the 'Kid' they want to get them in before Sept. 1. After that they will be null and void. I don't suppose there's any use in knocking him, though. I've known him for several years, and, while I know I'm not getting any angel, I'm satisfied."

Mrs. Ellis met McCoy, whose real name is Norman Selby, and who hails from Indiana, some three years ago when he was running a sanitarium on Saratoga Lake. McCoy had another wife then, whom he had divorced and remarried before the woman he is now to wed appeared on the McCoy horizon. Ellis, with his cousin, "Bud," was stopping with the McCoys, recuperating from a severe illness. While there he was stricken with typhoid fever.

"Ed was a dear friend of mine," said McCoy, in telling of his meeting with the widow. "He knew Miss Earle—that was her name then—and she came to my place to nurse him. When he got well he married her. About that time my wife ran away with a man named Thompson, who knew Ed, and when they got back from a trip around the world, I got a divorce. I also brought suit against Thompson for $100,000 damages, but it was settled out of court. There wasn't any money passed in the settlement, either. The suit was just arranged. The story about my having married again is all rot. Anybody who knows me knows that if I had another wife I wouldn't take a chance on jail by marrying Mrs. Ellis. That would make me a bigamist."

"It's not true that Miss Earle knew Mrs. Selby when she came to Saratoga. They met each other there. After my divorce I kept in touch with the Ellises. Mrs. Ellis and I are good friends now on account of my intimacy with her husband, who was just like a brother to me. When Ed died last Fall Mrs. Ellis was the most down-hearted woman I ever saw. She was in bed seven weeks, and wouldn't go near a theatre or anything like that. I heard from her every now and then, and when I came back from the West about six weeks ago she got apartments in the same hotel where I was stopping. We have been engaged now for about a month."

"Do you propose to settle down after the marriage and quit the ring forever?" was asked.

"I don't know about settling down," was the reply. "We expect to travel most of the time. I won't go back in the ring as long as Jeffries is in it. He is the only man in the world I can't beat, and if he quits I may take another try at the championship. Corbett is a dead one, Fitz has cashed in, and Hart isn't in my class. I guess Jack O'Brien is about the best of them outside of Jeff, and I know I can put Jack away."

"Wouldn't Mrs. Ellis object?"

"No, I guess not. She's mighty good about things, and lets me make up our mind for us, as she said to-day."

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

William Bedlow Crosby.

TARRYTOWN, May 28.—William Bedlow Crosby, a lawyer who practiced in New York, died last night at the home of his brother-in-law, Robert J. Powell, here. Mr. Crosby was born in New York in 1842. He was a son of John Player Crosby and grandson of Benjamin Franklin Butler, Attorney General in President Van Buren's Cabinet.

During the civil war Mr. Crosby was Paymaster in the Navy. Subsequently he practiced law. In 1872 he was appointed Consul General at Rome. He was associated in business with George Hoffman and Mr. Powell. Mrs. Crosby died in 1892. A son survives. Mr. Crosby was a member of the Bar Association and of the Lawyers' Club.

Ralph Pillsbury.

Ralph Pillsbury, a newspaper man, died on Saturday night at the S. R. Smith Infirmary at New Brighton, S. I., after a lingering illness. Mr. Pillsbury was born at Boston, and worked for a time on newspapers in that city. Then he came to New York where he worked on several morning and afternoon papers. For six months recently he was at Chattanooga, where he was employed on The News. Two months ago he returned to his home in Taylor Street, West Brighton.

Ex-Gov. E. W. Wilson.

CHARLESTON, West Va., May 28.—Ex-Gov. E. W. Wilson of West Virginia died to-day after, suffering for a year from tuberculosis. Mr. Wilson was born in 1844 at Harper's Ferry. He entered politics as a young man, was elected to the State Senate of West Virginia in 1872, and in 1881 was Speaker of the House of Delegates. From 1885 to 1890 he was Governor of the State, holding over nearly a year because of the Gubernatorial contest between Goff and Dunning.

Wilbur N. Waterbury.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 28.—Wilbur N. Waterbury, a brother of John I. Waterbury, President of the Manhattan Trust Company of New York, died this afternoon of apoplexy at his home, in Springdale. Mr. Waterbury was stricken Wednesday afternoon while driving with Mrs. Waterbury, and remained in a semi-conscious condition until death. He was fifty years old.

Obituary Notes.

STEPHEN HOLLY MILLER of Westchester County died at his residence, Mount Holly, at Katonah, yesterday, at the age of eighty-two. He was for thirty years Assessor of the town of Bedford, and for thirty-four years a Road Commissioner. He held the office of Under Sheriff of the county for many years. He leaves a wife, three sons, and two daughters.

D. J. O'Day, General Superintendent of the Standard Oil Company's interests west of Pennsylvania, died at Lima, Ohio, yesterday, after an illness of several weeks.

RURAL FOLK GO TO CONEY.

The Way They Spend Makes the Showmen's Hearts Glad.

Yesterday was the best day Coney Island has had since the Fourth of July last year, which was a record breaker. While there must have been a crowd of 250,000 from the metropolitan district, many thousands were landed at the seashore by excursion trains and boats from faraway little towns up State and from Connecticut. From New Jersey 16,000 arrived over the Erie Road.

They were country folks, and it didn't take the city folks long to find it out. The way the visitors from the country spent money made the New Yorkers stop and gaze in wonderment. They tried a little of everything offered for sale, rode on all the merry-go-rounds, saw all the shows, chewed candy, popcorn, and peanuts, and munched sandwiches.

But it was an orderly crowd and one that the business men of Coney Island would like to have there every day in the week.

The arrival of the great crowd earlier in the day set the showmen to hustling. Many of them were not prepared to open, but they could not let the money get by. Many of the shows were doing business with carpenters and painters working over the heads of the crowds.

The Boer War Show at the Brighton Beach end of the City by the Sea attracted a crowd of 5,000 to the afternoon performance. The crowd saw the Britons and the Boers fight in a drenching rain, and whenever a soldier slipped up in the mud he got an extra cheer. William Brady, the manager of the show announced yesterday that before the end of the Summer the entire seventy-five acres between Manhattan and Brighton Beaches, acquired by the amusement company, would all be laid out in shows of a spectacular nature.

Baldwin's airship will be among the attractions of the new Aerial Park, and will make the first ascension on June 15. The Manhattan Beach Company has almost completed its new boardwalk, which will connect with the Boer War Show grounds, and within a month will be a promenade from Coney Island to Manhattan Beach.

Over at Luna Park there was excitement for the crowd when a big truck containing a cage of polar bears broke down on the Brooklyn Rapid Transit tracks and blocked the cars for a time.

An accident gave some extra thrills to the performance of Raoul Monbar, an acrobat advertised as the human torpedo, who appears in the Luna Park circus ring. He shoots down an inclined plane in a car which stops suddenly and throws him out into space, where he grasps a trapeze. The car stopped suddenly yesterday before it reached the end of the plane, and the acrobat was thrown head first into a net, where he lay unconscious. He was unable to appear at the evening performance.

Over at Dreamland there was a tremendous crowd. Bonavita, the animal trainer in Bostock's show, had more trouble with the lion Baltimore, which has already caused him to lose an arm. The show was delayed for half an hour while Bonavita worked to get the stubborn lion into the ring.

Deputy Police Commissioner Lindsley went down to the Island in the afternoon in his automobile and watched Coney Island's new traffic squad, which began work on Surf Avenue yesterday, keeping automobiles and cabs moving.

Later on he visited Dreamland. While there a scaffolding with several workmen who were setting piles under the chutes broke, throwing one of them into the water. This man was Henry Pesarty of 2,338 Stillwell Avenue, Gravesend. He was taken out of the water in an unconscious condition, and died before a physician arrived.

10,000 SEE SQUADRON A.

Crowd Watches City's Cavalrymen on Dress Parade.

Ten thousand persons were in Van Cortlandt Park yesterday afternoon to see Squadron A on dress parade. The Squadron, under command of Major Oliver B. Bridgman, went through all sorts of manoeuvres, and the big crowd noisily expressed its delight. The 200 men are in camp at the park. They will break camp late to-day.

Yesterday they had reveille at 5 o'clock in the morning, but that was largely wasted because there wasn't anybody there to look at it. Twelve hours later, however, there were more people than could get a good look. The parade was the big event of the day. Major Bridgman said afterward that he was proud of his men, and that they had never drilled so well before.

In the show a riderless horse broke out of the stable and caused a lot of excitement among the crowd. He cavorted back and forth, and looked as if he might be going to trample a few women and babies under foot, but he did not, because somebody caught him. It was nearer real war, though, than anything else that happened. Earlier in the day Private Smith fell under a horse and hurt his ankle.

Capt. Arthur Wade, from Governors Island, commanded one of the troops.

LITTLE GIRL A DETECTIVE.

Spoke Up When She Saw Father's Money Stolen.

Through his twelve-year-old daughter, Henry B. Shalter of 217 Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, last night had a man arrested who he alleges stole his pocketbook, containing $200 and valuable papers. The prisoner gave his name as William Stein of 1,410 Amsterdam Avenue.

Mr. Shalter and his daughter Eva spent yesterday in New Jersey, and, returning to this city, boarded a Forty-second Street car. The daughter got a seat, and Mr. Shalter stood near her. When the car reached Eleventh Avenue the girl said:

"Papa, you are being robbed. I saw that man put his hand in your pocket, and pass something to another man."

Immediately there was confusion, and Shalter grabbed Stein, who was standing next to him. The daughter then exclaimed that Stein was the man, the other, she said, having jumped off the car. Stein tried to get away, but Shalter held him until the car reached Ninth Avenue, where a policeman was called. Stein was locked up in the West Forty-sixth Street Station on a charge of grand larceny.

SECRETARY MORTON HELD UP TWICE AT PIER

Failed to Get a Pass When He Went to Meet Brother.

COL. BISHOP SAVED HIM

Explained Identity to Customs Inspector—Secretary in Time to Meet Brother as Celtic Docks.

Secretary of the Navy Paul Morton, who came here on Saturday to meet his brother, Joy Morton of Chicago, on his return from Liverpool, met him at the White Star Line pier yesterday afternoon only after running up hard against some pier regulations. His troubles were due to his failure to get a permit to go aboard the Celtic, on which his brother came.

As he was walking up to the landing floor at the pier, a big guard employed by the line demanded his pass.

"I have none," said Mr. Morton.

"You can't go up," said the guard.

"I am Secretary Morton," said the visitor.

That, of course, let him by. But it did not end his troubles. He was about to go through the gate leading to the customs inclosure when a Customs Inspector tapped his shoulder and demanded his pass.

"I have not got one. For some reason I failed to procure it," explained Mr. Morton.

"Well, you will have to stay outside, then," responded the Inspector.

"But I am a Government official, and I have come all the way from Washington to meet my brother, Mr. Morton, who is on the Celtic."

About this time Col. Bishop, the Deputy Collector, happened to glance in the direction of the gate and saw the big form of the Secretary of the Navy. Col. Bishop, who immediately recognized Mr. Morton, rushed forward and promptly ushered Mr. Morton into the inclosure.

"This is Mr. Morton, the Secretary of the Navy," explained Col. Bishop to the Inspector.

"I am awfully sorry, but I did not—" the Inspector said to Mr. Morton.

Before he had time to finish the sentence the Secretary smilingly interrupted him and said:

"Oh, that is all right. You did the proper thing. I ought to have got a pass. Hold everybody up who fails to bring along his credentials."

Mr. Morton then hurried down the pier, and was in ample time to meet his brother as he walked down the gangplank.

Among Mr. Morton's fellow-passengers on the Celtic were the Right Rev. Leighton Coleman, Bishop of Delaware; the Rev. and Mrs. Percy Coates, Mr. and Mrs. William R. Day, Lieut. Col. Home Drummond and Lady Georgiana Home Drummond, Major V. E. Mitchell, Sir R. and Lady Musgrave, and Mr. and Mrs. George C. Rand.

The Celtic was due Saturday, but was unable to make port owing to the heavy fog prevailing on the Atlantic. She arrived off Sandy Hook early Saturday evening, and anchored to await the clearing of the atmosphere.

Another belated liner, whose tardiness was due to the fog, and which, like the Celtic, anchored outside Sandy Hook early Saturday evening, was the American liner St. Paul from Southampton. She docked about 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Among her passengers were H. Clay Evans of Chattanooga, ex-Consul General to London; Gen. Rush C. Hawkins, who it is said brings some paintings over for the Boston Museum, and Mr. and Mrs. Edwards Spencer.

BIG CHORUS AT MONTCLAIR.

250 Sing at Church Anniversary—Trombonists Start Celebration.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., May 28.—The First Congregational Church started last night the celebration of its thirty-fifth year, and at the same time to celebrate the thirty-fifth pastorate year of its only pastor, the Rev. Dr. Amory H. Bradford.

As the sun was setting last night four trombone players from the New York Philharmonic Society ascended to the tower of the church and wafted to the breeze the beautiful notes of Martin Luther's hymn, "The Mighty Fortress," thus announcing to Montclair that the celebration had begun. At the same time, in the interior of the edifice, a large congregation was listening to the same hymn sung by a combined choir of 250 voices.

The singing was by three large choirs, two of which were put in the choir loft. The third, a choral choir of nearly 100 boys, was stationed in the gallery.

The soloist was Adele Lais Baldwin of New York. The choir was directed by Walter S. Young, the choirmaster of St. Luke's Episcopal Church of Montclair. S. P. Warren of New York was at the organ, and Herr Schmitt was the director.

Dr. Bradford presided over the service, assisted by the Rev. Frederick Carter, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church.

This afternoon the service was repeated. Many were unable to gain entrance to the large church, so great was the crowd. The Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott preached at the morning service.

WON'T ALLOW A TABLET ON POET'S BIRTHPLACE

Owner of the House Refuses to Help in Honoring Whitman.

SLAB TO GO IN THE ROAD

Women of Huntington Not to be Outdone in Plan to Mark Historic Long Island Spot.

Walt Whitman's memory is to be honored in the town of Huntington, L. I., where he was born, by the erection of a tablet despite the unwillingness of the present owner of the house, Frank J. Rogers, to permit it to be placed either on the house or grounds. The women of the Colonial Society of Huntington conceived the idea of honoring the poet. When the owner of the house refused to join the movement the women applied to the Highway Commissioners and got permission to place the tablet in the road in front.

The matter was decided upon at a recent meeting of the society, and Miss Jessie Brush was appointed to go to West Hills to arrange for placing the tablet on the front of the house. She didn't know what to make of it when the owner flatly refused to allow the tablet to be placed on the house.

"You can't advertise any poet by using my house," he said.

"But you will allow us to place it upon the gatepost or in the ground, will you not?" asked Miss Brush.

No; gateposts were not made to be marred by marble signs, and the ground was made for growing things, he said. There was no room on the place for the tablet.

A party of members of the Colonial Society attended the next meeting of the Highway Commissioners. They got the necessary permission, and the tablet will be erected on the highway as soon as it is completed. The inscription will be as follows:

To Mark the Birthplace of WALT WHITMAN,
The Good Gray Poet.
Born May 31, 1819.
Erected by the Colonial Society of Huntington, 1905.

The little house in West Hills, where Whitman was born, is about five miles from the village of Huntington. Many visitors drive out from Huntington to see the place, but Rogers rarely invites one to enter.

The officers of the society which will place the tablet are Mrs. Frederick B. Sammis, President; Mrs. Irving Sammis, Vice President; Miss Jessie Brush, Secretary; Mrs. James Conklin, Assistant Secretary, and Mrs. J. Newell Sammis, Treasurer.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Showers and thunderstorms are indicated for Monday in the Mississippi Valley and thence westward to include Kansas, Nebraska, and the Dakotas. There will also be showers in the west portion of the upper lake region, and the rain area will probably extend into the Ohio Valley and the lower lake region by Tuesday. Important temperature changes are not anticipated.

The winds along the New England and Middle Atlantic Coasts will be light westerly; South Atlantic and East Gulf Coasts, light and variable; West Gulf Coast, fresh southeasterly; on the lower lakes, light and variable; upper lakes, fresh east to northeast.

Steamships departing Monday for European ports will have light westerly winds and fair weather to the Grand Banks.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND TUESDAY.

Eastern New York and New England—Fair Monday and Tuesday; light west winds.

New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania—Fair Monday; Tuesday, increasing cloudiness; light variable winds.

Western Pennsylvania and Western New York—Fair Monday; Tuesday, increasing cloudiness; light variable winds.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Windsor Trust Company, held on the 27th day of May, 1905, the following minute was adopted:
Charles H. Van Brunt, President of the Windsor Trust Company, died on May 26, 1905.
Accordingly we, the members of the Board of Directors of the Windsor Trust Company, have turned from our various vocations and have met in this special meeting for the purpose of noting upon our minutes our sorrow and our appreciation of the loss that has thereby come to this company, to the community, and to ourselves.
In anticipation of his enforced retirement from the bench through his attaining the limit of age fixed by the constitution, he assumed the Presidency of this company upon its organization; and by his wise advice, conservative action, and prudent oversight has ever since contributed to its success without compensation or personal reward. In this new field of activity he displayed the same vigor of intellect, soundness of judgment, and integrity of character that made him honored throughout a long public career.
The qualities of this strong and forceful personality, revealed to us in our intimate official association, inspired not only a deep feeling of respect and honor, but warm personal regard and affection. We have experienced profound personal grief at his decease.

BELMONT PARK CHANGES BEFORE NEXT MEETING

Remodeling of Course Contemplated by the Managers.

FINISH LINE TO BE MOVED

Alterations Under Consideration May Bring Compromise Plan to Suit Owners of Horses.

One change determined on in the arrangement of the Belmont Park racecourse before the next race meeting is held there in October, the shifting of the finish line to a point near the middle of the grand stand, has led the managers of the track to the discussion of other alterations which may result in an entire turning over of the original plans of the course. The change positively ordered by the Westchester Racing Association is the moving of the winning post to a point about 130 feet up the stretch, or to a place just a few feet beyond the end of the row of boxes reserved for club members in the front and lower end of the grand stand. This alteration is in recognition of the popular protest against the arrangement which existed through the first meeting when the finish was opposite the lower end of the members' inclosure, and between the boxes and the club stand, the general public thus having only a rear view of the finishes, which could be seen to advantage only from the places reserved for the club.

The change in the winning post will reduce the length of the seven furlongs chute by about 130 feet, and the mile and a quarter chute by the same distance, but it has been planned that the start for the mile and a quarer course shall be carried back a distance sufficient to make up the loss at the finish, while as only a few races of importance are run at seven furlongs, a special finish line will be left at the old place for the decision of the great seven furlong stakes for two-year-olds, the lesser stakes, and purse races at that distance to be run on the main track.

Beyond this one concession to popular opinion, however, the managers of Belmont Park have contemplated alterations which, if carried out, will convert Belmont Park into a race course of the regulation pattern in the United States, with the turns to the left, the method of running which horsemen universally have designated the "right way" since Belmont Park was opened, three weeks ago. This change, which the desires of horsemen and the public compelled the owners of the Monmouth Park track to make after the first experimental meeting on that once-famous race course, will be difficult to manage, and the alteration will be extremely expensive at Belmont Park, where the buildings all are of a character intended to be permanent, but, costly as the change must be, it is said that the Belmont Park managers have considered the matter seriously. Just how it can be managed without the moving of the big and costly buildings of masonry and steel is a problem for the track architect to worry over.

It may be that a compromise course will be determined on, but the owners of the track have been convinced by the results of their first meeting that should the track remain as it is it would require years of racing there to overcome the prejudice of horsemen and the general public feeling against the new style of running races.

The prejudice of the horsemen showed plainly in the small fields that ran at Belmont Park, where even the important and valuable stakes attracted only light entry lists, while immediately on the change of racing to the Gravesend track, an old-fashioned regulation mile oval, with the turns to the left, the entries grew so numerous that horses have been excluded from races every day of the Brooklyn meeting so far, under the rule of The Jockey Club limiting the number of starters in accordance with the width of the track at the starting post in each race. It was another indication of the dislike of horsemen to the turns to the right at Belmont Park that those who worked their horses on the mile training track there so persistently insisted on galloping their charges the old, or, to them, right way," of the course that early in the meeting the training track was closed and the gates locked to compel the exercising of horses in the new way on the main track. The prospect of change at Belmont, even should this be only some sort of compromise arrangement, is a matter of much interest to the horse owners, as many of them have declared that they would rather wait for racing on regulation courses and pass the Belmont Park by than accept the uncertainties of racing in the style they did at the opening of the big course at Queens.

RACE FOR FRENCH DERBY.

$20,000 Prize Won by Finasseur, Ridden by American Jockey.

PARIS, May 28.—The Prix Jockey Club (the French Derby) for three-year-olds, at one mile and a half, for a purse of $20,000, was run at Chantilly to-day.

Michel Eprussis's Finasseur, with the American jockey Nash Turner in the saddle, won the race, beating the favorite, Phoenix, and also Clyde, the winner of the Prix de Diane, last Sunday. The beautiful weather attracted an enormous crowd of spectators to the race course.

Graham Wins Road Race.

Chester Graham of Jersey City won the seventeen-mile road race held in conjunction with the annual Spring century run of the New Jersey Division of the Century Road Club of America held in New Jersey yesterday. About fifteen riders of the fast division took part in the race, which was started from Rutherford and finished at Jersey City.

Graham led most of the distance, with Joseph Harris and Clarence Todd close behind. They finished in that order.

HARLEM OARSMEN READY.

Only Await the Starting Gun for the Memorial Day Regatta.

Local and out-of-town oarsmen had a busy day on the Harlem River yesterday. The weather was ideal for rowing, and every sculler had a fine opportunity to finish his training for the big regatta on Tuesday. An unusually large number of shells were out in the forenoon, while the river was literally covered with craft in the afternoon and early evening.

With few exceptions all the visiting oarsmen who will compete on Tuesday put in an appearance during the day, and were assigned quarters at the various clubs along the river. The junior eight-oared crew of the New York Athletic Club, composed of Thompson, Andersen, Birch, Stewart, Gibbons, Stewart, Lloyd, Nesbith, (stroke,) Smythe, (coxswain,) and D. Miller, the "Mercury Foot" Club entry in the junior single sculls, are at the Nassau Boat Club. An intermediate eight of the Staten Island Boat Club, composed of O. T. Johnson, H. G. Scryser, R. E. Williamson, J. E. Knight, W. H. Donald, W. L. Olium, A. W. Luce, W. H. Donald, (stroke,) and E. M. Sexton, (coxswain,) are also at the Nassau Boat Club. At the Metropolitan Boat Club are the Seawanhaka Boat Club's entry in the senior four-oared shell event, and the junior centipede four of the Hudson Boat Club.

John P. Buckley, Portland Rowing Club, Portland, Me., and Charles Bulger, Union Boat Club, Albany, are stationed at the Metropolitan Boat Club. These two old-timers have come on to compete in the veteran single-sculling race. They met yesterday for the first time in twenty-four years. In 1881 they competed in the same race at the National Regatta at Washington.

The other visitors are George Grogan of the Sheepshead Boat Club and J. P. Thompson, Clifton Boat Club, at the Harlem Rowing Club.

Besides Buckle and Bulger, the other veterans to take the water were Clemens F. Muller, Nassau Boat Club; John Canavan, Nonpareil Rowing Club, and William Mulcare, Atalanta Boat Club.

The four of the Seawanhaka Boat Club were the cynosure of all eyes along the river yesterday. These men rowed a great race at Philadelphia on Saturday, winning in 7:15, which broke the record for the course by eighteen seconds.

Constance S. Titus, Nonpareil Rowing Club; Frank Vesely, Bohemian Boat Club, and Fred Fuessel, Harlem Rowing Club, who will meet in the senior single sculls on Tuesday, were out in the afternoon.

Four crews have entered the Naval Reserve race, and Monihan and Bulger of the Union Boat Club, Albany, and Mulcare and Young of the Atalanta Boat Club, will row in the veteran double sculls event. Lloyd of the Arlington Boat Club, Boston, has sent in a post entry for the association single sculls.

All the preparations for the regatta are about completed and ready for the start. The first race will be rowed at 9:30 A. M., and the last event is scheduled for 6 P. M.

FAST BRUSHES ON SPEEDWAY.

Ida Highwood Beats Kingwood in Two of Three Speedy Tilts.

Threatening weather kept the spectators away from the Harlem River Speedway yesterday morning, but the star performers were out despite it. With an almost clear road the champions were given free rein, and several of the best-contested half-mile heats seen this season were stepped over the upper stretch in close to record time.

By far the most interesting event was the long-anticipated race between Nathan Straus's cup winner Ida Highwood, 2:09¾, and the former champion Kingmond, 2:09, driven by Claus Bohling. Kingmond has been out of condition for a year, but his form and speed this Spring have made him a strong favorite for the championship.

Kingmond got away fast on the start and soon had a commanding lead. It was not until the quarter was reached that the mare was fully extended. Then her gait began to tell, and when the stretch was reached she was on even terms. In the final dash she won by a half length. The second heat was a repetition of the first. She led in the final heat, but broke and was distanced.

Dr. H. D. Gill drove his pacing mare Lady Direct a winning heat against Building Commissioner Hopper's Black Bell. Samuel Levy's mare Can't She Go stepped home a length in front of the crack trotter Maybe, driven by G. B. Keating.

Mr. Straus also took out Malacca and won a pretty heat from Boreham's Brother, driven by Walter M. Jermyn. Malacca also defeated the pacer George Dumond, driven by Dr. H. D. Gill. Others out were W. W. Cochran, with Bessie Thompson; Christopher Hacker, with King Tom; Thomas Sharkey, behind Hoppergrass; Charles Welland, driving Champion Mustard, and D. B. Hudson, driving his bay pair.

FRENCH COLTS FOR DERBY.

Val d'Or and Jardy Rivals of Cicero in Famous Race.

The Epsom Derby, the world's most famous race, will be run for the one hundred and twenty-fifth time on the Epsom course of England on Wednesday of this week, and after a Winter and Spring of speculation on the chances of the race English turfmen are contemplating the prospect that for the second time in the history of the great event it may be won by a French bred and owned horse.

In the latest betting on the Derby Cicero has been backed as a slight favorite over the two French horses, Val d'Or and Jardy, while the prospective field includes a dozen other horses, of which the most prominent are Vedas, Rouge Croix, Signorina, Llangibby, Plum Centre, and Polymelus. In the latest betting quotations Cicero was backed at 7 to 2, while 4 to 1 was accepted against Val d'Or and 9 to 2 against Jardy. Cicero is owned by Lord Rosebery, who with the Cyllene colt is trying to win his third Derby, that nobleman's colors having been carried successfully by Ladas and Sir Visto.

M. Edmond Blanc, the foremost turfman of France, in the same race is making his third great trial for a Derby, he having failed in two former notable efforts, the first time with Vinicius, second to Rock Sand, after an extremely weak ride, and the second time with Gouverant, which was frightened into a fit by the thunderstorm, which raged when St. Amant won.

The Derby in its entire history has but three times been won by horses other than English, and one of these occasions has caused 1865 to be known in English racing records as the "French year," from the fact that then Count La Grange's Gladiateur was returned the Derby winner. Kisber's is styled the Hungarian year, while a later triumph won by the American-bred colt Iroquois in the colors of the late Pierre Lorillard has left 1881 memorable as the "American year." One other partial victory for an American was won when Volodyovski, an English-bred horse, leased from Lady Meux by the late William C. Whitney, was first for the Derby, but that triumph was only in the fact that Volodyovski was trained and ridden by Americans, and ran in the colors of an American turfman.

CRIPPLE TRIES MURDER.

Fails in Attempt to Slay Foster Parents, So Kills Himself.

CHICAGO, May 28.—Armed with a revolver and a cane, John Corning, a cripple, crept last night into the sleeping room of Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Shirlander, who had taken care of him from babyhood, and tried to kill them. Corning fired a bullet at the bed. The noise woke Shirlander, and the cripple, throwing away the revolver, belabored his benefactors with the cane.

Shirlander finally choked him into helplessness; but as soon as he was released, Corning crept to the revolver and shot himself dead. Both Shirlander and his wife were severely cut about the face with the cane. No reason is known for the attempted murder.

BOY OF EIGHT A SUICIDE.

Jumped in Canal, Fearing Arrest for Breaking a Window.

LEWISTON, Me., May 28.—The body of Philie Levasseur, an eight-year-old boy, was found in the Chestnut Street Canal to-day. It is believed that the boy committed suicide.

He had been absenting himself from school, and on Thursday he broke a store window. He told a playmate he intended to kill himself, because he was afraid the police would punish him for breaking the window.

H&I COLLARS ARE LINEN

Collar Chat No. 18

Don't wear cotton collars.

Linen is worth three times as much as cotton.

What is the use of buying cotton when you can get linen collars at the same price—2 for 25c?

Most collars are cotton.

"Have a look" at the inside. If it's stamped "H. & I. Warranted Linen," it is the real thing.

Styles for exacting men.

If your dealer can't supply you, send us his name, asking for booklet, "Linen versus Cotton," and get collar-wise.

IT PAYS THE DEALER — IT PAYS LINEN

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Bulk of Last Week's Trading Confined to a Few Stocks.

Bonds Improved While Most Stocks Showed Declines—Business Almost Entirely in the Hands of Professional Traders.

Nearly three-quarters of all of last week's transactions in the stock market represented the dealings in the dozen most active issues, the remaining quarter of the business being divided among the 200 other issues dealt in. Such concentration as this shows clearly how far the market has passed into the hands of professional operators, who under present conditions are little disposed to venture outside of the few stocks which enjoy a broad market under almost any conditions. Of the 212 stocks that contributed to the week's operations 45 rose a point or more, 57 declined as much, and 110 moved only fractionally. Thus while the market early in the week showed a violent decline, and subsequently enjoyed a sharp recovery, the net results were not important enough to give much satisfaction to either bull or bear. The trading supplied a rather smaller number than usual of issues that fluctuated much more than the average. There was a decline of 14 points in Federal Mining and one of 11 points in Sloss-Sheffield to offset an advance of 13 points in Westinghouse Electric. Corn Products preferred on transactions amounting to about 2,000 shares showed a loss of 7½ points. Apart from these there were few unusual movements in either direction.

The relatively favorable showing made by the bond department the week before last was bettered last week. Of the 37 bonds that showed net changes of as much as a point 24 rose and only 13 declined. The general bond business, however, is reported to be extremely dull at the moment. One of the features of the trading in bonds was the continued activity and further advance in the Burlington joint 4s. The rumored retirement of these bonds was apparently the dominant influence with those who purchased them, although toward the end of the week some realizing sales took place on the theory that the price had already discounted the probable retirement of the bonds.

BUSINESS IN ENGLAND.

New Requirements Mostly Below Current Rate of Production.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

LONDON, May 28.—The Times in its financial supplement to-morrow will say:

"Business conditions show little variation from recent reports. In the majority of industrial branches new requirements are below the current rate of production and, even where well employed, manufacturers, except of cotton goods, complain of inadequate returns. The general tendency of prices has been upward.

"The grain markets further improved, with fair general business passing. Seeds and seed oils ruled strong, linseed and cotton seed reaching the highest prices this year.

"The cotton trade has been active in the speculative department and a further strong rise in futures has been made. Spot cotton is correspondingly dearer.

"Wool continues very firm, with domestic growths in good demand. Woolens and worsteds have been in somewhat better request, chiefly for low and medium grades. Blankets have been depressed.

"Pig iron has been inactive and lower and hematite dull, with a downward tendency. In finished products the best reports come from Wolverhampton and Sheffield, other centres making but indifferent records."

FINANCIAL.

TO ALL HOLDERS OF PREFERRED STOCK AND OF COMMON STOCK OF

Rubber Goods Mfg. Co.

Office of
CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK,
54 Wall Street, New York.

Pursuant to arrangements made by a Syndicate for the exchange of shares of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company for shares of the United States Rubber Company, the undersigned gives notice that in behalf of such Syndicate the Central Trust Company of New York is prepared to receive the deposit of certificates for any shares of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company for the purpose of such exchange on the following basis:

For each $100 par value of the Preferred Stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, $100 par value of the 8% non-cumulative First Preferred Stock of the United States Rubber Company.

For each $100 par value of the Common Stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, $50 par value of the 6% non-cumulative Second Preferred Stock of the United States Rubber Company.

Such preferred stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company must carry all dividends and rights to dividends declared or payable after July 1, 1905.

Dividends on the preferred stocks of the United States Rubber Company to be delivered to depositors, are to begin to accrue from July 1, 1905.

Arrangements have already been made for the acquisition of a very large proportion of the stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company.

The offer herein made for stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company is conditional upon the deposit and sale hereunder of at least two-thirds in amount of all outstanding shares of the capital stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company.

Certificates for stocks of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company must be deposited with the Central Trust Company of New York, as depositary, as stated below, in exchange for the transferable receipts.

The deposited certificates must be accompanied by suitable assignments and powers of attorney, in blank, duly executed, and having attached thereto, if required, suitable assignments or transfers of all dividends and rights to dividends, as above stated. Every deposit must be made upon the following further terms and conditions.

(1.) The undersigned shall have power to deliver the deposited certificates to the United States Rubber Company; but until so delivered the undersigned shall have full control over such certificates. The transfer and delivery to the United States Rubber Company of the deposited shares of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company may be completed whenever the undersigned shall deem that a sufficient amount of such stock shall have been deposited.

(2.) The certificates for shares of the United States Rubber Company deliverable to depositors shall be delivered at the office of the Central Trust Company of New York, in the City of New York, after public advertisement by the undersigned made in at least two newspapers in the City of New York. Such certificates may be issued in the names of the respective holders of the receipts entitled thereto, or may be issued in such other names as the undersigned may select, in which event they shall be endorsed for transfer in blank at the time of delivery. Every depositor agrees to accept in full payment and exchange for his deposited stock certificates for shares in the capital stock of the United States Rubber Company to be delivered at the rates above specified, in respect of the stock by him so deposited. At the option of the undersigned, temporary certificates for such shares may be delivered, pending the preparation and delivery of engraved certificates.

The United States Rubber Company has issued and has now outstanding 235,255 shares of preferred stock and 256,000 shares of common stock. Under resolutions of its Board of Directors at the meeting thereof held May 12, 1905, which action was ratified by resolutions of the stockholders in special meeting assembled upon May 25, 1905, the preferred stock is to be changed into a First Preferred Stock and is to be increased to 400,000 shares, of which 90,514 shares will be issuable in exchange for an equal amount of shares of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, and the remaining First Preferred Stock will be reserved for future requirements of the United States Rubber Company. By the same resolutions there has been authorized an issue of 100,000 shares of a Second Preferred Stock of the United States Rubber Company, all of which will be available to the aforesaid Syndicate under a contract with the United States Rubber Company, of which a copy is on file with the Central Trust Company of New York, and to which reference hereby is made,) providing for the offer by the Syndicate of one share of such Second Preferred Stock of the United States Rubber Company for every two shares of the common stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company. To the end that the Syndicate shall not be entitled to such Second Preferred Stock under said contract, such Second Preferred Stock will be held by the United States Rubber Company for its future corporate requirements. It is the intention of the United States Rubber Company to make application to the New York Stock Exchange for the listing of all new stock.

(3) The Central Trust Company of New York may make all such rules as it shall deem expedient covering the transfer and registration of receipts for deposited shares and for the closing of the transfer books for such receipts for any purpose.

(4) At any time before the stocks of the United States Rubber Company actually shall have been issued and delivered in exchange for stocks of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company deposited hereunder, this offer may be revoked in such case no act or notice of revocation shall be required other than an advertisement thereof at least once in each of two daily newspapers in the City of New York. In the event of any such revocation, the deposited stocks then remaining unexchanged shall be returned without charge upon surrender of the respective receipts issued therefor, and the depositors and receipt holders respectively shall have no claim against the United States Rubber Company, the Syndicate or against the undersigned.

Deposits must be made at the office of the Central Trust Company of New York, 54 Wall Street, New York City, on or before the 15th day of June, 1905. After that date no deposit will be received except in the discretion of the undersigned, and on such terms as the undersigned may prescribe.

The right is reserved to the undersigned to terminate the privilege of deposit hereunder at an earlier date upon two days' notice, to be given by publication at least once in each of two daily newspapers in the City of New York.

RUN DOWN BY BOY IN AUTO.

Magistrate Holds C. H. Campbell's Son Pending Lad's Injuries.

Charles Campbell, sixteen years old, who lives with his parents at Bretton Hall, an apartment house at Eighty-sixth Street and Broadway, was held in $2,000 bail for examination by Magistrate Pool in the West Side Court yesterday. The boy was driving an automobile which ran down August Thode, ten years old, of 310 West Ninety-seventh Street, who was playing in front of his home Saturday night. He is in J. Hood Wright Hospital with a broken leg.

Bicycle Policeman Scanlon, who arrested Campbell, told the Magistrate that the automobile was turning the corner just as the Thode boy ran across the street, and that Campbell could not stop the machine in time to avert the accident.

"The injured boy is not in a serious condition, and his father does not care to prosecute," said young Campbell's lawyer.

The boy may die, or he may be dead, for all I know to the contrary," said Magistrate Pool. "I will hold the defendant in $2,000 bail for examination."

Mrs. Campbell, the boy's mother, was in the automobile when the accident occurred. His father, Charles H. Campbell, a banker, sailed for Cuba, on Saturday.

JANITOR NO TYRANT; HE'S THE OPPRESSED

Homer Folk Gives Rockefeller Bible Class His Word for It.

INSTANCES OF HIS TRIALS

Bible Class Meets for the Last Time This Session—Hears Its Leader Is Improving.

After singing "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," the Rockefeller Bible class disbanded yesterday, no: to meet again till October. Then, Assistant Pastor Richardson announced, the members of the class will all have a chance to grasp their leader's hand and will have him with them from then on.

"Though we have not had our leader with us for the last few months," said Mr. Richardson, "we have been allowed to listen to some very helpful voices which have in great measure compensated for his absence. Nobody feels this more than does he himself, and he is very glad we have had the opportunities."

Janitors came in for a big share of the talk of Homer Folk, ex-Commissioner of Charities, at the meeting. This talk about janitors being tyrants and autocrats is all a mistake, Mr. Folk said. According to the ex-Commissioner the janitor is about the most unfortunate person in New York.

"In the comic papers," Mr. Folk remarked, "you are always seeing jokes about how the janitor tyrannizes over men who have vastly more money than he has. Often the joke is accompanied by a large picture displaying the janitor as a large, muscular man who looks able to crush the life out of whoever opposes him. As a matter of fact there is little truth in such a picture.

"Of course we may sometimes be a little at the mercy of our janitor, especially if our apartment is steam heated. But, generally speaking, janitors are about as unfortunate and as imposed-upon a class as you could find anywhere. In the first place, a janitor is usually a man who is physically disabled or for some other reason unfit to be a regular wage earner. He takes the job at very low wages because he lives rent free and has a little coal thrown in. Janitors' living quarters are cramped, damp, and unhealthful.

"Rarely is the top edge of the janitor's window more than a few inches above the sidewalk level. His rooms are bare and forlorn, especially, it seems to me, in what are considered rather high-grade apartment houses. The janitor's children are usually unhealthy and therefore bad children.

"My attention was once called to a bad case of this sort in a house just across the street from where I lived. Happening to know the Tenement House Commissioner, I mentioned it to him and he sent Inspectors there. They ordered certain changes. The landlord was unwilling to make the changes, and the janitor was just as angry, because he thought he was going to lose his job. Both of them abused the meddlers. We were beginning to think we had made bad matters worse when the landlord decided to put the janitor's family up on the first floor, so the effort did do some good, after all."

How to get rid of "panhandlers" and still keep a clear conscience was another thing the class members learned from Mr. Folk, though he did not use the popular term for professional mendicants. Tell the man who asks you for a night's lodging, says the ex-Charities Commissioner, that he can go to the Lodging House, at First Avenue and Twenty-third Street. The man who tells you of the five hungry children he has at home can be directed to the Charity Organization Society, at Fourth Avenue and Twenty-second Street, or to some district branch of the same organization. To give a man with five hungry children a quarter does not do much good. The society could look up the case, see if the man were telling the truth, and give more substantial aid.

The general subject of Mr. Folk's speech was the duty a man owes to his nearest neighbors outside of his family. Servants, he said, are our nearest neighbors, and they ought to get better treatment.

"When you go out looking for a new apartment," said Mr. Folk, "and have passed through the sitting room and dining room and kitchen, you come to a little two-by-four hole. That's for the servant girl. It's an unhealthy, unventilated place, fit to breed tuberculosis. The servants are our nearest neighbors. It's a law of physics that a small object very near the eye will shut off the view of a very large object far away. But sometimes it seems to me that in our charitable work the opposite rule prevails; we allow the misfortunes of a few people thousands of miles away to blind us to troubles of those near at home."

Mr. Folk closed by advising every young man to take an active interest in the largest charitable society of all the City of New York and its government.

"Take a part in the government," he said. "Don't merely vote. See to it that the departments are administered properly. A bad police force can do more harm in a week than all the good the church can do in mighty long time."

The average attendance for the session of the class closing yesterday was 143. This is about seven less than in the preceding session, but even Mr. Rockefeller was in Europe for more than half the time. Nothing in regard to the leader's health was hinted at yesterday, but the confident announcement of the assistant pastor that the class would see him next October leads the class to think that improvement has already begun.

FRIENDS AT ANNUAL MEETING.

Only a Few Attend in Old-Time Garb of the Quakers.

The Religious Society of Friends is holding its two hundred and tenth yearly meeting at its meeting house, Fifteenth Street and Rutherford Place. Friends from many near-by places and faraway cities have gathered, only a few of the elder Friends wearing the picturesquely simple dress of the old-time Quakers. Yesterday was devoted to worship, there being five gatherings during the day.

At 10 o'clock in the morning there was the gathering of the First Day School, at 11 o'clock a meeting for worship. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the First Day School Union met in the meeting house. There was a meeting for worship at 4:30 and in the evening the Young Friends' Association listened to an address by Ernest H. Crosby on "Tolstoy." All the meetings were unusually well attended, particularly those of the first day schools, which correspond to the Sunday schools of other faiths. The last day of the meetings will be Friday.

EXPRESS CASHIER HELD.

For Alleged $700 Shortage at Branch Office—Bigger Deficit, Maybe.

Danaiel M. Tobin, twenty-four years old, of 62 East Eighth Street, who until a few days ago was employed as cashier in the branch office of the Wells-Fargo Express Company at 17 East Fourteenth Street, was arraigned before Magistrate Moss in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday morning. The police charge Tobin with a shortage of something like $700 in his C. O. D. accounts with the company. Magistrate Moss held Tobin for a hearing to-morrow morning without bail.

Expert accountants are at work on the company's books used in the branch office. The police say the shortage may be very much more than is estimated now.

Drowned Man with $1,000 Identified.

The body of a man which was found floating in the North River, off Pier 58, on Friday, and on which was found $1,000, was identified at the Morgue last night by Patrick Roche of Greenwich, Washington County, N. NEVER SAW SO MANY BABIES.

And the Grown-Ups, Too, Had a Fine Day in Central Park.

It seemed that Manhattan Island emptied itself into Central Park yesterday. Old-timers thought that never before were so many babies gathered together at one time. Babies with white faces and blue dresses, babies with black faces and white dresses; they were all there.

Every type of man and woman was represented. There was the soulful young woman who cared not for worldly things, and sat with her back to the path, reading. There were the gay young damsels who ran in pairs; the more fortunate maiden strolling blissfullly with her "feller"; the wealthy aristocrat, who swept by in her victoria, and the young man who strutted by in his silk hat and tried to look as if he wore it every day in the week.

It was an orderly crowd. But one policeman was seen in action. He went after a youngster who was making a stage snowstorm by tearing up telegraph blanks and letting the wind scatter the pieces. Of all things that can be done in Central Park, nothing so disturbs the quiet of the policemen so much as the scattering of paper. Its effect on them is far greater than that of homicides and thefts. So when the fat policeman saw the manufactured snowstorm he actually trotted toward the tree in which the maker was perched. After glaring up at the boy, he stooped down and picked up five or six pieces of the paper. On several of them he saw "Telegraph blank." Still the snowstorm continued. Shaking his club at the boy up the tree, he shouted:

"Come down from there, Tommy W. Lawson. Yez tryin' to bur-ry this town in telegrams?"

Every elephant in the Zoo had gained about ten pounds, all in peanuts, before the day was over.

FOUGHT BURGLARS IN DARK.

Policeman Took a Beating, but Held on to One—Other Caught Later.

Two burglars gave Policeman Karff of the Bedford Avenue Station, Williamsburg, a hard fight early yesterday morning in the hallway of a house at 378 Grand Street. Two young men broke into the plumber's shop of Henry Watts, on the ground floor. The noise they made awakened George Lueberger, who lives over the store. Lueberger rushed to the street and found Policeman Karff.

The burglars heard the policeman coming and blew out the light. As Karff got within reach one of the men struck him on the head with an iron bar, smashing his helmet and stunning him. As Karff drew his club one of the burglars kicked him and the other opened the door leading to the yard. The policeman's club was wrenched from his grasp and he was struck again, the blow dissolving his left arm. He managed to draw his revolver and fired one shot at the burglar who was running out into the yard. Before the policeman could fire again the other thief knocked the revolver from his hand.

Policeman Schneider of the Williamsburg Bridge squad, who lives at 309 South First Street, in the rear of Watts's place, heard the shot and looked out of a rear window. He saw a man climbing a fence and shot at him.

Meanwhile Lueberger had gone to the Bedford Avenue Police Station and told about the burglary. Capt. Gallagher and half a dozen men reached the plumber's shop in time to see Karff in a desperate struggle with the man who had not been able to get away. The police clubbed the burglar into insensibility and then searched for the other man. They found him hiding in a woodshed in the yard of 301 South First Street. The men gave their names at the police station as William Wilson and Joseph Wallace, but refused to give addresses.

Woman Accuses Son's Former Fiancee and Suitor Who Won Her Away.

Henry Schwartsman of 133 Orchard Street and Yetta Saltzman of 81 Allen Street were held in $1,000 bail each in the Essex Market Police Court yesterday for examination on a charge of grand larceny brought by Mrs. Sarah Goldberg of 171 Attorney Street.

The theft was committed a week ago, but it was not until Saturday that Mrs. Goldberg discovered her loss. She missed a pair of diamond earrings, a diamond ring, and another ring, together with several pieces of jewelry in all about $7,000, she says. She reported the matter to the police of the Eldridge Street Station, and Detectives Landers and Galligan first arrested the Saltzman woman. They said they found in her possession four pawn tickets calling for the diamonds and a dress. The detectives say she made a confession implicating Schwartzman, saying that he influenced her to do the stealing. When he was arrested later he denied this.

According to the story told by Mrs. Goldberg, the young woman was engaged to her son, Hyman Goldberg, until last Monday, when they quarreled. For a month previous to that Mrs. Goldberg said, the prisoner had been living at her home. Schwartzman began coming to the house to see Yetta. Mrs. Goldberg, as a prospective mother-in-law, objected to his visits and Schwartzman was told to leave the house. A row followed, and Mrs. Goldberg said he stabbed her in the wrist and chest.

PRIZES TO YOUNG SOLDIERS.

Annual Awards Made at the Hebrew Orphan Asylum.

The annual entertainment and distribution of prizes of the Hebrew Benevolent and Orphan Asylum, of which Louis Stern is the President, was held in the home yesterday morning. The feature of the programme was a dumbbell drill by eight boys of the gymnasium class. Among the important prizes awarded were the Korn one-hundred-dollar prize to Samuel Bernstein; the Betty Bruhl prize of $50 each to Samuel Greenblatt and Annie Dubin, and the twenty-five-dollar prize from the Seligman Solomon Society of the ex-inmates of the institution, to J. Lang.

President Stern made the final address, awarded to each of the sixty boys of the first company of the battalion a silver medal for winning a silk flag against all the competitors in the Twelfth Regiment contest for the best-drilled company of cadets from asylums.

BEYERS MAY RECOVER.

Man Found Shot in Room Where Mrs. Weinert Was Dead Refuses to Talk.

Joseph Beyers, who on Saturday was found shot in the back room of the bird store of Otto Jacobi, at 609 Southern Boulevard, with the dead body of Mrs. Annie Weinert near him, is recovering in Lincoln Hospital. The physicians found that the bullet had been deflected by striking the skull, followed a course above the left eye, and lodged in the nose, making only a superficial wound.

Beyers sullenly refused to make any statement. He says he is sorry he did not kill himself, and the hospital authorities have to keep a constant watch upon him to prevent his finishing self-destruction. He is strapped to the cot. The woman left this note written in German:

To whom it may concern:

We wish to be buried in the same grave; no flowers and without tears. My heart bleeds for my poor children, but I cannot help it. I prefer to die with the man I love rather than live with my husband who treats me harshly. My husband has a wife and family in Germany and I want everybody to know it. Good-bye to all.

MRS. ANNIE WEINERT.

To Coroner Berry the husband said that he had been married in Germany but was divorced.

DIED SMOKING HIS PIPE.

Stem Still Clutched in His Teeth When Suicide Is Cut Down.

The body of John Hein, 55 years old, of 109 Ninth Avenue, Manhattan, was found hanging to a tree in Smith's Park, Glendale, the Borough of Queens, yesterday morning. There was every indication that he went about ending his life most deliberately.

He wrote a few lines in a notebook, saying that he was ill and tired of life. He slashed both of his wrists with a razor, and also tried to open one of the veins in his right leg. Then he adjusted a rope, and swung himself off a rock. He died smoking his pipe. It was still clutched in his teeth when the body was found, and was half full of tobacco. He had been out of work for seven months, and [illegible]

MANY PAY TRIBUTE TO THE SOLDIER DEAD

Thousands at Memorial Sunday Exercises in Brooklyn.

HIGH MASS AT NAVY YARD

Altar Erected on Parade Field—Graves Decorated in Many Places—Children Help in Services.

Memorial Sunday was observed by many of the Grand Army posts and other organizations of civil and Spanish war veterans in Brooklyn yesterday. The ceremonies of most interest were those at the Prison Ship Martyrs' Tomb, in Fort Greene Park; at the Lincoln Statue, in Prospect Park; at the National Cemetery, and in the navy yard. Members of various posts and societies visited the various cemeteries and placed flowers and plants upon the graves of soldiers and sailors who fell in the wars. In the evening many of the veterans attended special memorial services in the churches.

Several thousand were present at the exercises in Fort Greene Park. Thomas C. Devin Post, Grand Army of the Republic; the Society of Old Brooklynites, the Monitor Naval Veterans' Association, the Fourteenth Regiment War Veterans' Association, and the Knights of St. John and Malta took part. Children from St. Joseph's and St. John's Home and Public School No. 5 also participated. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Peter Donohue of St. James's Pro-Cathedral, addresses were made by Daniel J. Griffin and Magistrate E. Gaston Higginbotham, and there was singing of patriotic songs by the children.

The memorial services at the Lincoln Statue, in Prospect Park, were conducted by Abel Smith Post and the Memorial and Executive Committee of the Grand Army. After the monument had been decorated with wreaths and flowers, prayer was offered by the Rev. Luther D. Gable of St. Stephen's English Lutheran Church. Addresses were made by Col. Richard S. Seckerson, Congressman George E. Waldo, and Congressman Charles T. Dunwell. There was singing by the audience and a benediction by the Rev. James A. Tappan, Department Chaplain of the Grand Army.

A high military mass in honor of the dead of the Nation's wars was celebrated on the campus fronting the marine barracks in the navy yard. It was attended by 10,000, and was under the auspices of the United Spanish War Veterans. Mass was celebrated at an altar in the parade field. The Rev. W. H. T. Reaney, Chaplain in the navy, was the celebrant. He was assisted by the Rev. John P. Chidwick, who was Chaplain of the ill-fated Maine; the Rev. John T. Nash of the Church of the Sacred Heart, and the Rev. Father Chouteau.

Many attended the memorial exercises in the National Cemetery, Cypress Hills, where rest many of the soldier dead. The ceremonies were conducted by the Army and Navy Union. A dozen garrisons of the Army and Navy Union took part in the exercises. Marines and bluejackets from the navy yard and a detachment of regulars from Fort Hamilton, together with Grand Army posts, Spanish War Veterans' Societies, and American Volunteer Cadets also took part. The orator was the Rev. John P. Chidwick. Addresses were also made by Commander Hugh H. Henry, Past Department Commander Joseph W. Kay of the Grand Army, and Harrison C. Glore. The musical programme included choruses by 100 members of the Brooklyn Sängerbund and singing by the Austin Male Quartet. A solo—"The Holy City"—was sung by Miss Amelia K. Stephan.

The annual Memorial Day celebration of the Young Men's League, a Jewish charitable society of the upper west side, in this borough, was held yesterday afternoon at Terrace Garden. Many were present. Maurice Blumenthal delivered the oration.

Representatives of Philip Kearny Post, G. A. R., yesterday visited Old Trinity Churchyard and decorated the grave of Gen. Philip Kearny of civil war fame, and also the graves there of the soldiers of the Revolutionary War. A large wreath was placed upon the grave of Gen. Kearny. A wreath and three silk flags were placed on the grave of Alexander Hamilton. The graves of Gen. Clarkson, Gen. Marinus Willits, Commander James Nicholson, and William Alexander, Earl of Stirling, were also decorated.

PRESCRIBED BY TELEPHONE.

Doctor So Ordered Medicine for Girl in Faint, and Investigation Starts.

Carrie Lemborg, twenty-one years old, a bookkeeper, of 1,597 Broadway, went into a drug store in Forty-second Street, near the Grand Central Station, about 8 o'clock last night, and made some purchase at the soda counter. She then turned to the cashier to make payment, and as she did so reeled backward, growing pale and gasping for breath. The clerk, the other clerk of the store, and the proprietor of the place telephoned for a nearby doctor.

The doctor was busy at the time, but, on learning the symptoms of the young woman, prescribed over the telephone that about thirty grains of bromide of potassium and one-sixtieth of a grain of strychnine be given to her, to revive the heart action.

This was administered, and the patient revived slightly, but relapsed again into unconsciousness. Policeman Fox of the Grand Central Station was called in, and sent in call for an ambulance, which was responded to, with Dr. Cocheu on the seat.

Dr. Cocheu examined the young woman and asked what had been administered to her. He immediately declared that the dose had been too heavy. He removed her to the hospital, where she was revived and her identity learned.

Her condition, however, was such that nothing could be learned as to the cause of her swooning. The case is considered unusual, and an investigation is being made as to why a prescription should be made over the telephone in the manner told. A call at the home of the doctor who had prescribed was made, but the physician was not at home.

BLUECOAT FATALLY STRICKEN.

Policeman Patrick Crowe Dies of Apoplexy in Hospital.

Patrolman Patrick Crowe, one of Capt. Hussey's plain clothes men in the East Twenty-second Street Station, died of apoplexy early yesterday morning in Roosevelt Hospital. He was forty-six years old. He was seized with an apoplectic shock while leaving a café at Fifty-fourth Street and Ninth Avenue at about 1 o'clock, and was taken to the hospital, where he died in a few hours. He leaves a widow and several children, his home being at 132 West Ninety-sixth Street.

Crowe had been one of Capt. Hussey's most trusted men for a long time. He was appointed to the force in 1886. His record was an excellent one, and he had [illegible]

SUICIDE AT DETECTIVE'S.

Dave Hennen Morris's Former Valet Dead at Policeman's House.

James Thompson, 27 years old, a Swedish valet, out of work, but far from penniless, committed suicide by inhaling illuminating gas early yesterday morning in his room, at 245 East Twenty-first Street, in the house occupied by Detective Sergeant Green of the Central Office. Thompson was the only lodger, occupying a spare room which Green lets.

From a letter of recommendation found in his effects it was learned that Thompson was last employed by "Dave" Hennen Morris at his residence, 267 West Seventy-second Street. In the letter Mr. Morris said he had employed Thompson, and found him efficient, reliable, and trustworthy.

Thompson hired the room, furnished, from Green two weeks ago. He said he was then out of work, but expected soon to get another position. He seemed to be well supplied with money, and paid his rent promptly in advance.

Early yesterday morning Mrs. Green, wife of the Detective Sergeant, noticed an odor of gas in the house, and traced it to Thompson's room. When the door was opened the man was found lying dead on his bed. He was partly dressed. A rubber tube led from the open jet to his mouth.

About $15 and a bankbook, showing a balance of several hundred dollars, were found in Thompson's clothes. Detective Sergeant Green says that Thompson's suicide was a surprise to him.

ATLANTIC WINS THE KAISER'S CUP

TAKES 12 DAYS AND 4 HOURS

None of the Other Competing Yachts Sighted—Atlantic's Best Run, 341 Knots.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

LONDON, May 29.—The Kaiser's Cup, offered for the international yacht race from Sandy Hook to the Lizard Light, has become an American institution, to rank hereafter in history beside the famous trophy won in British waters by the yacht America fifty-four years ago, by virtue of the magnificent transatlantic run made by Wilson Marshall's schooner Atlantic. She passed the mark boat at 9:18 o'clock this evening with every stitch of her canvas set, running superbly before a light southwest wind, with the Stars and Stripes standing out, bold and beautiful, from her peak. She went by the Isles of Scilly signaling station at 9:57 o'clock this morning, long before the earliest time set by anybody for the appearance at that point of the leader in the race.

In another respect, too, she astonished everybody interested in the race, for, from news received here from time to time of the progress of the race the conviction had settled in the minds of the British public that it would be the German boat that would come in ahead. It is hardly necessary to say that intense satisfaction prevails here that the winning yacht is American rather than German. The consideration of this fact goes far to lessen disappointment that it was not vouchsafed to British yachtsmen to gain possession of the Kaiser's mug.

So speedy was the Atlantic that she nearly caught the mark boat napping. The gunboat Pfeil had been sent by the Kaiser to serve as a finish post in the race. She was lying placidly anchored in Falmouth Harbor this morning, never dreaming the foremost of the yachts would arrive before Wednesday, when a telegram from the Scilly Isles said the Atlantic had passed abeam the islands. The Pfeil fortunately had steam up, and got under way post haste and put out of Falmouth in order to take up her position a mile to the south of the Lizard Light in time for the winning yacht to fulfill the conditions by passing between her and the headland. The arrival of the Atlantic was timed by Capt. Coerper, German Naval Attaché and Chairman of the Racing Sub-Committee in England. Lord Lonsdale, a member of the committee, lay a short distance off in his yacht Norseman. Sir Edward Birbeck, another member of the committee, arrived in time to witness the finish just before the Atlantic passed the line. The Pfeil signaled congratulations, and guns were fired aboard her and bombs from shore in honor of the victor.

After the finish, Capt. Barr was heartily congratulated by newspaper men and others. He said the yacht had behaved beautifully all the way across the ocean. She had made the wonderful average of 10½ knots an hour ever since leaving Sandy Hook, with the exception of the first day in head winds. The weather had been decidedly favorable and the yacht had been able to carry a good spread of canvas throughout the voyage. Everybody on board was well and all were overjoyed by the great victory their craft had won. They expected to win, but all the same they were not sure until they were overhauled by a newspaper correspondent on their way from the Isles of Scilly to the Lizard.

The Atlantic was sighted from the Scilly Islands this morning making good headway toward the Lizard Light. It was estimated that she would occupy in the passage to the finish line a little over four hours, but the wind died out and the tide turned, and it took her almost twelve to pass the line.

At exactly fifteen minutes after the 9 o'clock hour was recorded at the Greenwich Observatory, when she passed to the south of the Lizard Lighthouse, between it and the German cruiser Pfeil, and signaled the light, announcing her arrival, she had been out from the Hook twelve days, four hours, and three minutes.

The Atlantic did not pause in her journey for an instant after receiving and answering congratulations, but proceeded to Southampton, intent upon making a new record past the Needles and to Southampton and Cowes.

At the Scilly Islands, where the steam yacht Lady of the Isles awaited her coming, she was spoken and asked of BOYS RAID 8TH AVE. CAR.

Rob Broker's Wife, Fight to Get Men's Jewelry, Then Escape.

Four boys, fourteen and fifteen years old, made a raid upon an open northbound car of the Eighth Avenue line at 8:30 o'clock last night at Seventy-seventh Street.

In spite of the passengers, the conductor, and the motorman, Mrs. Francis A. Bond, wife of a broker living at 21 West Ninety-eighth Street, was robbed of a chatelaine bag containing jewelry valued at several hundred dollars and papers which, she said later, were of much greater value. None of the youths was captured, although two of them were chased into Central Park by two of the passengers while a third was pursued by another passenger.

The boys boarded the car at Seventy-sixth Street. One sat next to Mrs. Bond. There came a shrill whistle, which the police afterward thought came from the leader of the quartet. The boy who had nestled up against Mrs. Bond quickly snatched her chatelaine bag. Jumping from the car while it was at full speed, he made off into the Park.

The other three boys sprang at men passengers seated near the outside rail and tried to snatch from them watches, chains, or scarf pins. The men fought and the boys hit back. As far as is known the young thieves got nothing from the men. The boys jumped off at Seventy-seventh Street. Two made for the Park and the third turned westward. The car then stopped.

William Hawthorne, who said he was stationed at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, followed the two boys into the Park, but lost sight of them in the shrubbery. A well-dressed athletic young man chased the boy who ran west, but that boy also escaped. Mrs. Bond had been screaming "Stop Thief!" all this time. At last when the men who had chased the boys returned Mrs. Bond went with them to the West Sixty-eighth Street Police Station, where she told her story.

Mrs. Bond said that a thief had recently broken into her house. Mrs. Bond added that she thought some enemy might have induced the robbery on the car, but she declined to explain that remark.

MADE $30,000,000 ON RISE.

Luck of Hill Family and Other St. Paul Holders of N. S. Stock.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 29.—James J. Hill, his family, and a few other St. Paul men made about $30,000,000 by the rise of Northern Securities stock. The figures are based upon the number of shares owned and the value of each share, $163, at which price the last sale was made.

The Hill family holdings were: J. J. Hill, $53,269,810; James N. Hill, $1,193,279; Samuel Hill, $1,147,145; Louis W. Hill, $1,010,280; Mary Hill, $818,000; Anna E. Hill, $65,423.

Other St. Paul holdings: Frederick Weyerhaeuser, $8,266,520; D. C. Shepard, $1,152,410; Crawford Livingston, $1,630,000; St. Paul Seminary, $527,741; A. Guthrie, $444,827; R. I. Farrington, $363,490.

SUBWAY RUSHER AT IT.

Knocks Woman Down Boarding Express—Police May Act.

A rather small, well-dressed man stood impatiently waiting for the south-bound Subway express train that drew into the Grand Central Station yesterday afternoon at 3:15 o'clock. He had a small grip in one hand, and he brandished a cane in the other.

As soon as the doors of the train slid open he made a rush through the crowd, attempting to board the train even before any one got off. He brushed aside several children who stood in his path. He knocked down a middle-aged woman who was coming out of the train.

She fell upon the concrete floor, narrowly missing the opening between the train and the station platform. Policeman McCormick of the Grand Central Station ran to her side. She was later removed to Flower Hospital in charge of Dr. Cocheu. The fall had caused a painful contusion on the left side of her head. She recovered so as to go home by 4 o'clock, however. The woman said she was Mrs. Florence A. Gordon of 149 West One Hundred and Seventeenth Street.

So much complaint has been made of brutal rushers in the Grand Central Subway station that Capt. Byrne is thinking of assigning policemen to protect women and children there.

AUTOS STOPPED BY ROPES.

Drastic Methods Adopted by Ardsley Constables to Catch Tourists.

Secretary S. M. Butler of the Automobile Club of America issued a warning last night to automobilists who may be touring on the Saw Mill Road, in the vicinity of Ardsley, just above Yonkers, to keep a sharp eye out for constables hiding in the bushes, as well as for ropes cleverly stretched across the road for the purpose of catching those who may be deemed going faster than the legal rate of speed. It is claimed that a raid upon automobilists is being made by the village constables of Ardsley, and that on Sunday nine motor-car drivers were stopped by means of ropes across the roads, taken at once before a Justice of Peace in Ardsley, and fined $20 apiece.

The Automobile Club of America intends to take steps to prevent the placing of ropes and wires across the road as an unwarranted menace to travel and individual safety.

MASSACRE OF ARMENIANS.

Mussulmans Slaying and Pillaging in Transcaucasia.

NAKHICHEVAN, Government of Erivan, Transcaucasia, May 29.—This Government has been almost in a state of anarchy for days.

A massacre of Armenians by the Tartar population is proceeding here and in the surrounding villages. The streets are filled with dead and wounded.

The Mussulmans not only attack but pillage and burn the houses of Christians. The number of victims is not established, but exceeds 100 dead, including a priest.

The butchery is reported to be still more dreadful in the villages.

It is feared that the Persian Kurds will join the Tartars.

The authorities are powerless to cope with the situation.

CZAR STRICKEN; WEPT FOR SHIPS

Official Russia Depressed, but People Still Ignorant.

RADICAL LEADERS JUBILANT

Believe Disaster Presages An Era of Reform—Reports of Mutiny on Ships.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 29.—Not one Russian in ten thousand has even a suspicion of the terrible disaster reported from Tokio, for the censorship has carefully supressed the dreadful laconic message enumerating the trophies secured by Admiral Togo.

The Bourse this morning was actually strong, but a suspicion that things were not going well was spread abroad by the evening papers. Yet the invincible apathy of the Russians toward the war caused almost utter indifference regarding the course of the naval battle.

Although everybody appreciated the momentous character of the issue, only among officers and officials was deep interest shown. The absence of any information except from Tokio adds to the bitterness of the defeat.

The news reached Tsarskoe-Selo this afternoon in the form of an agency telegram. The effect upon the Czar must indeed be terrible, for he placed all his hopes upon the issue of the sea fight. With him all the officials in Russia saw in victory the hopes of a revival of the Government's prestige at home and abroad, the return of popular confidence, and the eventual triumph of the Russian policy of expansion in the Far East.

I hear, but cannot vouch for its correctness, a story that Admiral Rojestvensky boarded a destroyer and headed for Vladivostok.

According to another story, seventy Japanese torpedo boats dashed headlong into the Russian squadron, sinking and disabling battleships and cruisers, but at terrible cost, sixty of their boats being lost. The reported capture of Russian warships is put down to panic caused by the torpedo attack.

I hear that the crew of one of the Russian ships mutinied while proceeding to the China Sea. Rojestvensky brought the mutineers to reason by threatening to open fire upon them. The presence of disaffection among the sailors may also account for the striking of four Russian flags in this modern Trafalgar.

To the great majority of Russians Rojestvensky's overthrow will bode nothing but good in its promise of peace and assurance of reform.

By The Associated Press.

ST. PETERSBURG, Tuesday, May 30.—After waiting vainly all day and evening for direct news from the scattered remnants of Admiral Rojestvensky's destroyed and beaten fleet, the Russian Admiralty at midnight no longer attempted to hold out against the overwhelming evidence pouring in from all directions that the fleet on which all its hopes were centred had suffered a greater disaster than did the combined French and Spanish fleets at Trafalgar.

Private advices are said to have reached the city from Vladivostok, according to which Rojestvensky is alive, but that he had a narrow escape. He is said to have transferred his flag from the Kniaz Souvaroff to one of the battleships subsequently sunk, and that he was wounded and picked up by a torpedo boat.

More bitter even than defeat is the Japanese report of the virtual annihilation of the Russian fleet with practically no loss on the other side, and many officers cling doggedly to the belief that Admiral Togo must have suffered heavily.

With every ship of Admiral Nebogatoff's reinforcing division either sent to the bottom or forced to strike its flag, with only six of Rojestvensky's original sixteen fighting ships absent from the list of the vessels sunk or captured, and with the Japanese pursuit still continuing, no naval authority has the temerity to dream that Russia can again attempt to wrest the mastery of the sea from Japan in the present war.

The captured warships alone will furnish Japan with ready-made reinforcements which will be more than a match for the Fourth Pacific Squadron, now about to sail from Kronstadt.

The Emperor was completely prostrated by the news, and, according to reports, he broke down and wept.

The effect of the disaster will be a terrible blow to the Government. The futility of trying to stagger on on land is everywhere recognized, and the cry for "peace at any price" is sure to be raised. This time is is believed the Government cannot resist such a cry.

Indeed, the Radical Liberals are openly rejoicing in this hour of their country's humiliation. They declare that the disaster means peace and a Constitution and that the deaths of thousands of their fellow-countrymen and the loss of over $100,000,000 worth of warships is not too big a price to pay.

Diplomats entertain no doubt that the belligerent faction will continue to urge that the war be fought to the bitter end, but the friends of Russia abroad, and especially France, are now bringing overwhelming arguments to bear in favor of peace.

There is excellent reason to believe that the Russian Government in this crisis will turn to M. Delcassé, the French Foreign Minister, in whose ability and loyalty as Russia's friend the Emperor and his Ministers have implicit confidence. Some time ago it appeared likely that President Roosevelt would play a big rôle in the peace negotiations, but now his share is likely to be determined by M. Delcassé's decision. The French Minister may, of course, consider it wise to place the negotiations in President Roosevelt's hands.

The War Party, however, will insist now, as it did after the battle of Mukden, that peace is impossible on the heels of defeat. The members of this faction are already proclaiming that the naval disaster in nowise alters the situation on land, Gen. Linevitch having prepared his plans as if the fleet did not exist.

The censorship is taking the position that it is improper to accept the Japanese reports, in the absence of official news, and has forbidden the publication of foreign dispatches giving details of the defeat.

The Government undoubtedly fears the effect of the news of the disaster upon the country, as evidence of which Governor General Trepoff has taken personal charge of the censorship in St. Petersburg.

The news of the defeat became known in Warsaw to-night and was received with ill-concealed joy. The Poles are anticipating that as a result they will secure concessions from the Government.

HAY WOULD ARRANGE PEACE.

View of Diplomats Regarding His Visit to Paris.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The utter disaster which has overtaken the Russian fleet is accepted in high official circles in Washington as "the beginning of the end." This is a phrase which has been on every lip to-day around the State, War, and Navy Departments.

A circumstance that is regarded here as significant is the presence of Secretary Hay in Paris, which is expected to be the theatre of the initiatory peace negotiations. The attempts of Mr. Hay to avoid the appearance of any international purpose in his journey to the French capital are not taken seriously.

It is the expectation that the American Secretary of State will be consulted by those Prime Ministers and Ambassadors whose efforts will be directed to the problem of establishing peace between Japan and Russia, and that he will try to arrange that the permanent treaty negotiations be conducted in Washington. As Mr. Hay is now expected to return at the beginning of July to resume his duties at the State Department, an early move in the direction of peace may be looked for.

Quick to realize the far-reaching effect of Admiral Rojestvensky's defeat, and in keeping with his promise, announced a long time ago, to do all in his power to bring the belligerents in the Far East to consent to direct negotiations at the proper time, President Roosevelt to-night received by special appointment Mr. Takahira, the Japanese Minister, and a conference followed which lasted the greater part of the evening. Earlier in the day the Minister had called and left for the President the report of the battle later given out at the legation.

Sir Mortimer Durand, the British Ambassador, who is just back from London, will lunch with the President to-morrow, when the whole situation will be thoroughly discussed. Count Cassini, the Russian Ambassador, said to-night that he expected to see the President before the week was over, and Baron Sternburg, the German Ambassador, who was early at the Russian Embassy to-day, is constantly in touch with the President, on whom, through his intimate acquaintance with Mr. Roosevelt, he is at liberty to call at any time.

At the interested embassies and legations this evening the opinion was firmly expressed that President Roosevelt would undoubtedly lead the neutral nations in the effort to bring about peace. At to-night's conference it is thought that the President's first object was to ascertain on what basis Japan would discuss the question of peace.

Count Cassini said to-night:

"Talk of peace is premature. If the victory be as stupendous as the Japanese would have the world believe, the neutral powers can scarcely wish that Japan be allowed to remain without a taste of defeat. Much as I would welcome an end of the war for some reasons, my belief is that the effect of Rojestvensky's defeat will be the indefinite prolongation of the war. Russia must fight on, perhaps for years, but until the tables are turned."

Minister Takahira said:

"Ask Russia, not Japan, if the hour of peace has arrived. Our fleet is still pursuing the enemy. It is to Russia, not to Japan, that the initiative toward peace is to be looked for."

Baron Rosen, who is to succeed Count Cassini as Ambassador to the United States, and whose popularity in Japan commends him especially in the present juncture, has arranged to reach Washington early in July, when Count Cassini will sail for his new post at Madrid. These movements of the diplomats likely to be concerned in the framing of a convention lead to the belief that Washington is to be the scene of the signing of the treaty of peace.

CHASING THE REMNANTS

Togo Following up His Victory—One Russian Ship Reaches a Japanese Port and Surrenders.

LONDON, Tuesday, May 30.—The splendid Russian squadron which sailed from the Baltic last Autumn under Admiral Rojestvensky, together with the reinforcing squadron under Admiral Nebogatoff, has been practically annihilated by the Japanese fleet under Admiral Togo.

Each dispatch received makes the Japanese victory greater. It is no longer a question of how many vessels the Russians lost, but of how many were able to escape. According to the Japanese official report thirteen vessels have been sunk and six have been captured. The ships sunk included two battleships, one coast defense ship, and five cruisers, and those captured included two battleships and two coast defense ships.

In addition to these the Japanese believe three warships were sunk on Saturday, while another Russian warship has arrived at a Japanese port and has hoisted the white flag.

Admiral Nebogatoff and 3,000 men have been captured. The fate of Admiral Rojestvensky is unknown. According to a Tokio dispatch there is some ground for the belief that he perished, while dispatches from Vladivostok are said to have reached St. Petersburg saying that he transferred his flag from the Kniaz Souvaroff to one of the battleships that were sunk, that he was wounded, and that he was saved by a torpedo boat.

Reports were current here yesterday, purporting to be from authoritative private sources, to the effect that the Kniaz Souvaroff was among the vessels sunk. According to the same reports the Japanese were following up the Russians and picking off their ships one by one.

According to Stock Exchange reports three Japanese cruisers were sunk and a dozen torpedo boat destroyers were sunk or disabled.

A dispatch to The Evening News from Tokio yesterday said eight Captains of Russian warships were drowned in the battle of Saturday.

The Tokio correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says a Russian warship has arrived off Iwami, on the southwest coast of Japan, and has hoisted the white flag. The correspondent adds that 800 officers and men, most of whom are wounded, are being assisted by the Japanese Red Cross at Iwami.

The Shanghai correspondent of The Morning Post, in a dispatch dated May 30, says:

"The Russian transports off Woo-Sung hauled down their flags to-day."

According to the correspondent of The Daily Mail at Söul, early on Saturday morning Admiral Togo, with practically all the powerful fighting ships of the Japanese Navy, was at Ma-sam-Pho, Korea, when wireless signals from his scouts between Tsu and Quelpart Islands announced the approach of the Russian fleet in full force.

A few hours later the scouts reported that the Russians were not ascending the Western channel, as had been anticipated, but that they were coming up the Eastern channel, which caused some surprise.

Admiral Togo immediately started at full speed round the north of Tsu Island, and when he doubled the island he saw the Russians coming in two columns. He then brought a terrific fire to bear on the flank of the port column, and as the Russians fell into disorder he forced them steadily eastward toward the Japanese coast, where they were attacked by every vessel that flew the Japanese flag.

Repeated torpedo attacks were delivered, some of them with the greatest success.

The vessels which escaped, the correspondent says, will probably be able to reach Vladivostok, and he adds that other operations of the utmost importance are proceeding.

The Tokio correspondent of The Daily Mail says that the Russians apparently supposed that the Japanese base was at the Pescadores, as they carefully avoided passing those islands and pursued a roundabout course before entering Tsu Channel.

13 SUNK; 6 CAPTURED.

Japanese Report of Russian Losses Known Up to Yesterday.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Mr. Takahira, the Japanese Minister here, this morning received a cablegram from his Government telling him that the Japanese naval victory had been "absolute and overwhelming."

Later in the day Mr. Takahira received the following detailed report, dated May 29:

"Reports received from Admiral Togo at the Japanese headquarters:

"FIRST REPORT, received morning May 27:

"'Immediately upon the receipt of report that Russian squadron was in sight our combined squadron started for attack. Weather is fine to-day, but with heavy seas.'

"SECOND REPORT, received night May 27:

"'Combined squadron attacked Russian squadron to-day near Okinoshima (southeast of Tsushima) and defeated it, sinking at least four ships and inflicting heavy damage upon others. Damage to our ships is insignificant. Our destroyer and torpedo flotillas delivered attack after sunset.'

"THIRD REPORT, received Monday, May 29:

"'Main force of our combined squadron continued pursuit since the 27th, and attacked 28th, near Liancourt Rocks, (northeast of Okinoshima,) a squadron consisting of Nikolai I., (battleship,) Orel, (battleship,) Seniavin, (coast-defense ship,) Apraxine, (coast-defense ship,) and Izumrud, (cruiser.) Izumrud fled, while remaining four vessels surrendered. No damage to our ships.

"'According to statements of prisoners, vessels sunk in engagement May 27 were Borodino, (battleship,) Alexander III., (battleship,) Jemchug, (cruiser,) and three other ships.

"'Rear Admiral Nebogatoff and about 2,000 other Russians were taken prisoners.'

"The following are damages suffered by enemy in addition to those given above since commencement of battle as reported by commanders not under immediate command of Togo and by observation stations:

"Sunk—Admiral Kakhimoff, (armored cruiser,) Dmitri Donskoi, (armored cruiser,) Svietlana, (cruiser,) Admiral Oushakoff, (coast-defense ship,) Kamchatka, (repair ship,) Irutshush, and three destroyers.

"Captured — Vladimir Monomakh, (armored cruiser,) which foundered after capture; one special service ship, name unknown, and one destroyer.

"Russian losses definitely known so far may be classified as follows: Two battleships, one coast-defense ship, five cruisers, two special ships, and three destroyers were sunk; two battleships, two coast-defense ships, one special service ship, and one destroyer were captured. It is not yet clear whether three vessels, as stated by prisoners to have been sunk, are included or not in above list.

"There are more than 1,000 prisoners, besides 2,000 taken by main force of combined squadron.

"The naval engagement is still in progress, so that it will take some time before the final results can be known."

According to advices received by the Navy Department from Tokio, the Japanese, in addition to the ships named in Mr. Takahira's report, captured the battleship Sissoi Veliky, while the Russian flagship, the Kniaz Souvaroff, was seriously damaged.

The following dispatch, dated May 27, has been received by the Navy Department:

"The Russian fleet was sighted at 6 o'clock A. M. between Goto Island and Quelpart Island, Korea, in double column, Jemchug leading the way. Borodino, Orel, Kniaz Souvaroff, Alexander III., Osiyabya, Sissoi Veliky, Navarin, Nicolai I., starboard; Admiral Nakhimoff, Admiral Oushakoff, Admiral Seniavin, Admiral Apraxine, and other cruisers, port."

When the report given out at the Japanese Legation this evening was shown to a naval officer who is known as one of the best-posted officers in Washington on the naval engagements that have occurred since the present war began, he said:

"In attacking with his torpedo flotilla after sundown, Togo pursued the policy which he has followed from the outset. There is nothing in the dispatch to show that this attack inflicted any damage on the Russian ships, though in all probability it had a most disastrous effect on the morale of the personnel. It is evident that the straits were not held, for some of the Russian ships were far to the northward when sunk and others are yet unaccounted for.

"The vessels attacked near the Liancourt rocks were the laggards of the fleet, and the presence among them of the Orel, a much faster ship than the others, would seem to indicate that this swift ship had been badly damaged. The fact that these ships surrendered would indicate that they were surrounded by the main division of Togo's fleet, and if this is so, Rojestvensky, with the other ships which escaped, must have gained considerable headway to the northward, which would necessitate the Japanese fleet making good time to overtake them before Vladivostok is reached.

"What is most difficult to explain is the capture of so many vessels. The sinking of some of the larger and more powerful ships may be explained by the opening of the valves of the ships before they were fought to a finish. The fact that so many prisoners were taken would indicate that in some cases the ships were abandoned before they were completely disabled. Certainly gunfire could not have sunk the larger battleships without the destruction of nearly every man on board.

"Thus far the reports show a great but not a complete victory for Admiral Togo. The destruction or capture of Rojestvensky's flagship and the other large ships would give Togo the most complete and sweeping naval victory of modern times."

LONDON, Tuesday, May 30.—The version of Admiral Togo's report, given out at the Japanese Legation here, says that the Vladimir Monomakh foundered and was afterward captured.

TOGO STILL PURSUING.

Japanese Navy Department Not Giving Out Unverified Reports.

TOKIO, May 29.—The number of Russian vessels of all descriptions sunk or captured by Admiral Togo's fleet now stands at nineteen. It is possible that three more warships were sunk in the fight on Saturday and others later.

The fate of Vice Admiral Rojestvensky is not known. There is some belief that he perished.

Rear Admiral Nebogatoff (formerly commander of the Fourth Division of the Russian Pacific Fleet and recently commander of the Information Squadron, composed of scouts and merchantmen) is one of the 3,000 prisoners captured by the Japanese.

The battle began on Saturday morning, and the Japanese are still in pursuit of the Russians.

The Navy Department refrains from crediting reports of other successes than those announced until it is assured of their correctness.

Tokio to-night is celebrating Japan's great victory. The main thoroughfares are thronged with joyous, cheering crowds. Impromptu processions move in various directions. The paraders carry lanterns and go singing through the streets, following bands.

Plans are on foot for an organized formal celebration of Togo's victory.

SHANGHAI COMFORTS RUSSIA.

Tells St. Petersburg Seven Japanese and Four Russian Ships Sank.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 29.—The St. Petersburg Telegraph Agency has received the following from Shanghai:

"News has been received here that seven Japanese ships, two of which were armored, and four Russian ships have been sunk.

"It is confidently believed here that the Japanese are awaiting the publication of Admiral Rojestvensky's official dispatches from Vladivostok before admitting the extent of their own losses."

WE FEEL EASY NOW—HAYASHI.

Minister Says Further Japanese Operations Are Simplified.

LONDON, Tuesday, May 30.—Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Minister here, in an interview last evening, said:

"We all rejoice at Togo's magnificent victory. We had confidence that he would not be so badly beaten as, it seems, the Russians thought he would be, but at the same time we were not entirely free from anxiety concerning the outcome of this long-expected naval battle. Now we feel quite easy in our minds, and the remainder seems easy.

"As to whether this fight will prove a step in the direction of peace we cannot judge. Outsiders cannot express an opinion of any value on this matter. The question must be regarded from the Russian point of view.

"One thing is certain—this makes the further Japanese naval and military operations very easy. If the war continues, Vladivostok may become a second Port Arthur. It seems impossible under the circumstances that Russia will send more ships to the Far East.

"We consider the victory as the most decisive of modern times. Its effect will be far-reaching, and it will have an influence not only on the future of the Far East, but also on Europe. Russia can no longer be reckoned with as a naval power.

"It is my opinion that Togo's victory is on a par with that which Nelson achieved a century ago this year."

Regarding the Russian threat to carry the war into Mongolia, Baron Hayashi said that the Japanese would follow wherever the Russians led. The Japanese Government had promised only to confine the war to the territory used by Russia.

KAISER TALKS OF THE BATTLE.

Is Said to Have Congratulated Arisugawa on Togo's Victory.

BERLIN, May 29.—Extra copies of the newspapers with lists of the sunken and captured Russian warships were fluttering throughout the great crowd assembled to see the Prince and Princess Arisugawa arrive here to-day to represent the Emperor of Japan at the wedding of Crown Prince Frederick William and Duchess Cecilia.

Emperor William sent a special train to the French frontier to bring the Prince and Princess and their suite of thirty persons to Berlin, and was himself at the station to welcome them. They were cheered in a fashion quite uncommon in Berlin, probably because every one is talking of the success of the Japanese in the naval battle.

The Emperor is reported to have alluded cordially to the Japanese success.

Prince and Princess Arisugawaa are the guests of the Emperor at the Hotel Bristol, where the Russian deputation to the wedding will also be quartered. The hotel is next door to the Russian Embassy.

Work was almost suspended in the Navy Department this morning when twenty copies of the Tokio official bulletin announcing Togo's great victory were distributed there. The officers and bureau chiefs left their desks to talk over the news with one another.

Although the tone on the Boerse was already affected favorably by peace hopes following the lead of London, the official news from Tokio of Togo's victory caused a spontaneous though momentary suspension of trading. Then business became more active and prices generally were higher. Russian fours fell four-tenths of a point, to 87.60, and then gained one-tenth.

Russian funds are held with extreme tenacity, mostly by investors who are determined to hold on to them until they rise when the war is over. The Russian Government bankers are also always watchful in order to prevent a tumble.

Naval critics accept without reserve the dispatches from Tokio and build on them the view that the war has entered upon the last phase, in which the Japanese command of the sea will continue unthreatened until the end. The battle of Saturday is called the greatest fleet action for a hundred years, or since Trafalgar, and is classed here as being immensely greater than the Adriatic Sea fight of 1866 or the naval battle of Santiago in 1898.

The Berlin newspapers give the fullest recognition to Togo's achievement and say that it will rank among the greatest events of history. The battle is characterized as the greatest drama ever known.

Astonishment is expressed at the sorry figure cut by the Russian battleships.

The National Zeitung identifies the entire white race with Russia's defeat, which, it says, must fill with grave concern any one who believes in the great economic and civilizing mission of the white race. The paper anticipates that the white race will no longer be regarded with respect by the yellow races of East Asia.

FRENCH LOOK FOR PEACE.

The Temps Declares That Russia Has Played Her Last Card.

PARIS, May 29.—The magnitude of the Russian naval disaster has fairly stunned the French public. The dispatches showing that the Japanese fleet escaped practically unscathed dispelled the hope that Rojestvensky, by sacrificing a portion of his fleet, had succeeded in crippling Togo's fleet to such an extent that the Japanese would be placed in a position of inferiority.

The disaster is generally discussed by the officials, the public, and the press in a tone of depression, the prevailing view being that Russia will now be compelled to seek some means of terminating the war.

The Bourse first gave evidence of a strong peace sentiment by the buoyancy of the market. The leading journals, including the semi-official Temps, urge peace, declaring that Russia has played her last card. The officials, however, take a more conservative view, maintaining it is too early to foresee the effect of the battle until fuller details are available.

It was stated in diplomatic quarters to-night that while the result of the battle would contribute to eventual peace, it did not give any immediate prospect of the opening of negotiations to that end. It was pointed out that the obstinacy of the character of the Russians would probably impel them to turn their hopes toward Gen. Linevitch and to await the result of another land battle.

It was said in this connection that the land situation would not be likely to permit Marshal Oyama to strike another decisive blow within two weeks, thus prolonging Russia's hopes and deferring her willingness to ask for peace.

The newspapers unanimously deplore the Russian disaster. The Figaro expresses apprehension with regard to the "Yellow Peril."

The Matin says: "It is more than a defeat—it is a catastrophe."

The Journal declares it is vain to endeavor to conceal the importance of the disaster and that Russia has definitely lost.

GHASTLY BLOW TO RUSSIA.

Vienna Papers on the Battle—Say Peace Must Follow.

VIENNA, May 29.—The comments in the newspapers here are exclusively to the effect that Russia is conclusively beaten and that nothing remains but to sue for peace.

The papers add that it has been proved that the Russians can never vanquish the Japanese. They say the result of the engagement in the Strait of Korea is a ghastly blow to Russian prestige abroad and at home, and that the sooner Russia concludes an honorable peace the sooner she can hope to improve the conditions existing in her interior.

FIVE WARSHIPS PASS MANILA.

Headed South, and Are Believed to be Japanese Vessels.

MANILA, May 29.—Five warships were sighted off Corregidor Island, at the entrance to the Bay of Manila, this morning. They were headed south.

It is believed that they were Japanese vessels.

BRITONS EULOGIZE TOGO.

Jubilation Over Japan's Victory, Which Is Compared to Trafalgar.

LONDON, Tuesday, May 30.—The battle between the fleets of Admiral Togo and Rojestvensky strikes the imagination of the British public with far greater force than any of the military operations on land. Hence Togo's victory arouses more intense interest here than any other incident of the war, and is greeted by the newspapers and the people with great jubilation. Everywhere it is being compared to Trafalgar and Aboukir.

"Togo," says The Daily Telegraph editorially, "has won the Trafalgar of the Far East, and won it, as his allies rejoice to note, in Nelson's year."

The same paper recalls the fact that the "battles of Manila Bay and Santiago did not cost the Americans a single ship, and, indeed, hardly a single life, and it would therefore not be surprising to find that Togo had gained a relatively bloodless victory."

In varying strains of eulogy all the morning papers pay tribute to Admiral Togo's extraordinary success. They say the sun has set on Russia's naval glory and comment on the possibilities of peace. The universal opinion is that it would be criminal for the Czar to continue the war, but serious doubts are expressed as to whether Saturday's disaster will even convince the War Party in St. Petersburg of the hopelessness of a further struggle. The belief seems to prevail that it will rather harden the hearts of the war advocates to persevere to the bitter end.

Details of the great sea fight are anxiously awaited. Naval experts mostly hold to the opinion that the greatest damage was done by the Japanese torpedo boat destroyers. It is said that Togo was prepared to sacrifice practically the whole of his mosquito flotilla if he could thereby destroy Rojestvensky's battleships and armored cruisers.

The surrender of several of the Russian vessels is regarded as proving the complete demoralization of Rojestvensky's men, and it is fully expected that further captures will be made before the remnant of his ships reaches Vladivostok.

STATEMENT FOR MR. HAY.

He Is Not Going to Call at the French Foreign Office.

PARIS, May 29.—The following authoritative statement was given out here to-day:

"Mr. Hay is spending a few days in Paris and is by order of his physician observing a strict after-cure regimen. He has not called at the Foreign Office and does not expect to do so. He has not been presented to President Loubet, nor has he asked it. It is understood that he has explained through Ambassador McCormick that his state of health makes it impossible for him to have that honor. He makes no visits and receives none, social or official."

The foregoing is intended to stop the reports attaching a certain degree of significance to Mr. Hay's visit to Paris in connection with pending international affairs and the war in the Far East.

Mr. and Mrs. Hay will leave Paris on Friday for London, sailing from Liverpool on the White Star Line steamer Baltic on June 7.

POPE HOPES IT WILL END WAR.

Merry del Val Tells Him of the Result of the Battle.

ROME, May 29.—Cardinal Merry del Val, the Papal Secretary of State, today notified the Pope of the result of the naval battle in the Far East. The Pontiff is reported to have said:

"The loss of life is most deplorable, but I hope and pray it may be the end of the war."

QUIT CIRCUS TO CELEBRATE.

Japanese in Pittsburg Refuse to Work After News of Victory.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 29.—The Japanese acrobats employed by the Barnum & Bailey Circus, which is showing here, positively refused to work to-day. When they heard of the great victory which the Japanese forces had scored over the Russians they threw up both hands, and, in spite of all protests, declared that they were going to celebrate, no matter if they lost their jobs.

All kinds of persuasion were used, but they were obdurate. They left the show grounds in a bunch early in the morning and have not been seen since. The Police Department was notified to be on the lookout for them, and Mayor Hayes asked the Police Magistrates to be lenient with them if any of the Japanese are caught in the toils.

DID NOT SINK AMERICAN SHIP.

Vessel Sent to the Bottom by the Russians Was a Britisher.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Minister Griscom has cabled to the State Department from Tokio, under to-day's date, that the ship supposed to be American, which was sunk off the coast of Formosa on May 20 by the Russian fleet, was a British vessel, according to a report made to him by the Japanese Government.

On instructions from President Roosevelt Acting Secretary of State Loomis had telegraphed to Mr. Griscom inquiring into the sinking of the vessel.

The State Department was informed by Ambassador Meyer to-day that the Russian Foreign Office had no news concerning the matter and had promised to furnish him with any information which it might receive.

Hammerstein Celebrates, Too.

Oscar Hammerstein was so inspired by the Japanese victory yesterday that he composed a march about it. Mr. Hammerstein says he wrote to Admiral Togo some time ago, saying that in the event of a victory he would dedicate a march to the Admiral.

SHIPS LOST BY RUSSIA SINCE THE WAR BEGAN

Destruction of Korietz and Variag the First Reverse.

PORT ARTHUR FLEET GONE

Vladivostok Cruisers Damaged and Baltic Fleet Now Has Been Annihilated.

The table which follows shows the fate of the Russian fleet which was in Far Eastern waters when the war with Japan began on Feb. 8, 1904, and, so far as is known, the fate of the great fleet under Admiral Rojestvensky. Russia has now only a scratch squadron in the Baltic, including a number of vessels which European experts say are fit for nothing but a naval museum, and a fairly good squadron in the Black Sea, which she is unable to use without violating her treaties with the European powers:

AT CHE-MUL-PHO, KOREA, WHEN THE WAR BEGAN.

KORIETZ, cruiser, 1,213 tons.
Sunk by the Japanese squadron, under Admiral Uriu on Feb. 9, 1904.

VARIAG, cruiser, 6,500 tons.
Sunk by the Japanese squadron under Admiral Uriu, Feb. 9, 1904.

THE PORT ARTHUR SQUADRON.

CZAREVITCH, battleship, 12,912 tons.
Interned at Tsing-Tau, the German port in Shan-Tung, after being badly damaged in the battle with Admiral Togo's fleet last Aug. 10.

PERESVIET, battleship, 12,674 tons.
Sunk by the Russians at Port Arthur before the capitulation of the fortress.

PETROPAVLOVSK, battleship, 11,354 tons.
Sunk by a Japanese mine, with Admiral Makaroff and 700 officers and men, outside Port Arthur, on April 13, 1904.

POBIEDA, battleship, 12,674 tons.
Sunk by the Russians at Port Arthur.

POLTAVA, battleship, 10,960 tons.
Sunk by the Russians at Port Arthur.

RETVIZAN, battleship, 12,700 tons.
Sunk by the Russians at Port Arthur.

SEVASTOPOL, battleship, 10,960 tons.
Sunk by the Russians at Port Arthur.

BAYAN, armored cruiser, 7,726 tons.
Sunk by the Russians at Port Arthur.

NOVIK, armored cruiser, 3,080 tons.
Sunk in battle with Kamimura's squadron on Aug. 14, after taking part in the battle of Aug. 10, escaping to Tsing-Tau, and leaving that port.

ASKOLD, cruiser, 5,905 tons.
Interned at Shanghai after the battle of Aug. 10.

BOYARIN, cruiser, 3,200 tons.
Sunk by striking a Russian mine.

DIANA, cruiser, 6,630 tons.
Interned at Saigon after the battle of Aug. 10.

PALLADA, cruiser, 6,630 tons.
Sunk by the Russians at Port Arthur.

THE VLADIVOSTOK SQUADRON.

GROMOBOI, armored cruiser, 12,336 tons.
Damaged in naval engagements, but repaired and is supposed to be available.

ROSSIA, armored cruiser, 12,130 tons.
Damaged in battle, but repaired.

RURIK, armored cruiser, 10,923 tons.
Sunk in battle with Kamimura's squadron, Aug. 14.

BOGATYR, cruiser, 6,645 tons.
Ran ashore off Vladivostok and was lost.

THE COMBINED BALTIC FLEET.

KNIAZ SOUVAROFF, battleship, Admiral Rojestvensky's flagship, 13,516 tons.
Seriously damaged, according to advices received by the United States Navy Department from Tokio. Sunk, according to report in London.

OREL, battleship, 13,516 tons.
Captured May 28.

IMPERATOR ALEXANDER III., battleship, 13,516 tons.
Sunk May 27.

BORODINO, battleship, 13,516 tons.
Sunk May 27.

OSLYABYA, battleship, 12,674 tons.
Fate unknown.

SISSOI VELIKY, battleship, 10,400 tons.
Captured, according to advices from Tokio to American Navy Department.

NAVARIN, battleship, 10,206 tons.
Fate unknown.

IMPERATOR NIKOLAI I., battleship, 9,672 tons.
Captured May 28.

ADMIRAL APRAXINE, coast defense ship, 4,126 tons.
Captured May 28.

ADMIRAL OUSHAKOFF, coast defense ship, 4,648 tons.
Sunk.

ADMIRAL SENTAVIN, coast defense ship, 4,792 tons.
Captured May 28.

ADMIRAL NAKHIMOFF, armored cruiser, 8,524 tons.
Sunk.

DMITRI DONSKOI, armored cruiser, 6,200 tons.
Sunk.

VLADIMIR MONOMAKH, armored cruiser, 5,593 tons.
Captured, and foundered after capture.

AURORA, cruiser, 6,731 tons.
Fate unknown.

OLEG, cruiser, 6,675 tons.
Fate unknown.

IZUMRUD, cruiser, 3,106 tons.
Fled May 28. Fate unknown.

JEMCHUG, cruiser, 3,106 tons.
Sunk May 27.

SVIETLANA, cruiser, 3,862 tons.
Sunk May 27.

ALMAZ, cruiser, 3,285 tons.
Fate unknown.

Any attempt to compute the total value of the vessels which Russia has lost is only guesswork, but it is believed that $200,000,000 is a conservative estimate.

Of the vessels which Rojestvensky is known to have lost a peculiar interest attaches in this country to the Dmitri Donskoi, which was the cruiser Russia sent here in 1893 for the naval celebration in connection with the World's Fair at Chicago. She was built in 1885, and when she was in New York was regarded as a model of strength. She was a fine modern cruiser. The appearance of the Russian tars on her, cheerful, brawny, bronzed fellows, evoked much favorable comment. The Dmitri Donskoi had an armored belt six inches thick and ten inches of armor over her bulkheads and heavy gun positions. Her armament included six 6-inch guns and ten 4.7-inch guns. Her crew numbered 510 officers and men.

BEGINNING OF END—DEWEY.

Admiral Cannot See How Russia Can Continue Campaign.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—The great victory achieved by Admiral Togo was the principal topic of discussion to-day in official circles.

Admiral Dewey exhibited the greatest interest in the details of the battle, which were brought to him by newspaper men, the press dispatches being more full and in advance of official advices.

The Admiral expressed the belief that Russia would now take steps to secure peace. When the report which gave Togo's statement of the result of the battle was shown to him, Admiral Dewey said:

"It is the beginning of the end. In my opinion the victory of the Japanese may be attributed to their training and preparedness. Doubtless the same spirit that they showed in their assaults on Port Arthur was exhibited.

"It takes a long time to build a fleet, and I cannot see how Russia is now in a position to continue her campaign on sea. Japan, with the battleships captured by her, and with the Russian ships sunk at Port Arthur, which she will doubtless be able to restore to usefulness, now appears to have the preponderating sea power."

"The Baltic fleet," said a naval officer, "was the last hope of Russia, and she has now absolutely nothing on which to rely to continue the war. The fleet which she has penned up in the Black Sea, though a comparatively strong one, cannot be gotten out of there without raising a storm of protest from England.

"It is not likely that Russia will attempt to bring that fleet into play. It is my opinion that Japanese gunnery was chiefly responsible for the crushing blow administered to Rojestvensky's powerful squadron."

WON'T END WAR, EVANS SAYS.

Admiral Thinks Russians Will Fight Harder Than Ever.

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., May 29.—In the opinion of Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, commanding the First Division of the battleship squadron of the North Atlantic fleet, now in Hampton Roads, the victory won by the Japanese fleet will not have the effect of bringing the war between Russia and Japan to an end.

"In my opinion," he said, "the Russian Government will not be ready for peace until some great victory has been won for the Russian arms, either on the land or sea, and this new disaster will, I think, prevent rather than assist peace.

"Unless I am greatly mistaken, every ship of Rojestvensky's squadron was either sunk or captured. There can be no escape. The Russians have no base from which to operate, and they are probably entirely at the mercy of the Japanese.

"Whether or not the engagement will teach any great naval lesson I cannot now say. One thing that will probably be brought out will be the usefulness of torpedo boats. If they are ever to be of service, now is the time to prove it. In the immediate vicinity of the Straits of Korea are the two most powerful torpedo stations in the world, controlled by the Japanese. From these two stations 200 torpedo boats can be operated within a radius of 200 miles."

The fact that Rojestvensky took the course through the Straits of Korea to reach Vladivostok instead of keeping out in the Pacific has created surprise among the officers of the fleet. They expected that he would try to reach Vladivostok, and then, making that his base, operate in the Straits of Korea against the Japanese. This they say would have given him a safe base and allowed him a safe retreat in case of a defeat such as he has suffered.

FAIRBANKS'S WAR HINT.

Says We Have Quick Route to Orient in Event of Trouble.

KALISPELL, Mont., May 29.—Vice President Fairbanks, whose special car is attached to the Great Northern flier, caught his first glimpse of the Rocky Mountains to-day. A crowd had assembled at the Kalispell Station to greet the Vice President, and he made a few remarks.

Referring incidentally to the war in the Far East, Mr. Fairbanks said that should military necessities require it this Government had a quick route to the Far East by the Northern lines and their fast steamers from Seattle.

THE NEWS IN THE TIMES.

Tokio's Afternoon Announcement Printed in New York the Morning Before.

The many readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES who read at their breakfast tables or riding downtown to business yesterday morning that Admiral Togo had smashed the Russian fleet may learn herewith how a piece of news that was dated from Tokio, half way around the world, at 2:15 o'clock Monday afternoon, Tokio time, found its way into their newspaper yesterday, and how the newspaper itself got to their dealer or into their houses so swiftly.

In Tokio 2:15 o'clock in the afternoon means practically 2:15 o'clock of the morning before in New York. In other words, there is a difference of about twelve hours in time between the two cities, which are almost opposite each other on the earth's surface. The item telling about Togo's great victory started on its voyage half way around the earth when the clocks in The Times Building were pointing to 15 minutes after 2 o'clock yesterday morning. It sped from Tokio to Manila, and thence by way of the Pacific cable to San Francisco and New York in exactly 2 hours and 16 minutes, for it was 4:31 yesterday morning when a telegraphic key on the eighteenth floor of The Times Building ticked off the first letter of the official message from Tokio. In just 19 minutes after this message began to arrive the news had been printed in a postscript edition of THE NEW YORK TIMES, dated 5 A. M. and the presses were turning out papers ready for distribution.

Newsdealers had received their regular supplies of papers long before, and quick work was necessary to get the edition containing the official announcement to them so that it might reach their customers.

Wagons had been kept in waiting and the routes along which there was the heaviest circulation were first attended to. As each newsstand was reached the supply of papers there was quickly exchanged for the new edition. The papers were thus distributed all over the west side and on the main avenues of the east side of the city, in the hotel and theatre district, in the busy neighborhoods of Wall Street and the bridge, and in some cases in New York was regarded as a marvel of promptness.

JAPANESE IN NEW YORK WILL SEND CUP TO TOGO

Plans for Big Celebration of the Naval Victory.

BELIEVE PEACE IS NEAR

Japanese Financiers Say New Bonds Will Be Issued at Lower Interest for War Loan.

A substantial recognition of Admiral Togo's victory will be sent to him by the Japanese of New York within the next few days. The gift probably will be in the form of a silver and gold loving cup.

This was planned last evening at a meeting of Japanese, held at their clubhouse, 44 West Eighty-fifth Street, in connection with the proposed plan for a big celebration of the great sea victory, to take place some night this week. Carnegie Hall probably will be chosen for the place of celebration. A cable of congratulation will also be sent to Admiral Togo.

A minor celebration will be held Thursday evening at the clubhouse, when a reception will be tendered to Baron Kaneko and K. Takahashi. Mr. Takahashi, who floated the Government loan, will leave soon for Japan.

Business among the Japanese commercial houses yesterday was almost suspended, while the Japanese, from the humblest little Jap from the Cherry Street lodging houses to the wealthy merchants and bankers, eagerly sought the bulletins and read the latest news of Togo's triumph.

Consul General Uchida was kept busy all day receiving congratulations by telegraph and telephone.

"I am greatly gratified with the result of the big battle," said Mr. Uchida, "but it is no more than I expected. I was sure we would win, with our splendid men." Referring to Admiral Togo, Mr. Uchida said "the old man certainly did great work.

"I do not believe the Russians will continue the war much longer," Mr. Uchida said, "because of their internal differences and financial troubles."

When asked how Togo kept the movements of his fleet secret from the Russians so long, Mr. Uchida said:

"That was a simple matter. You see, Japanese newspapers are not permitted to print war news that would give a hint to the enemy, and the censorship is very strict. In this way Togo had an advantage. I think the Russian vessels that escaped are now fleeing southward. Togo has such an effective blockade system that none of them will get to Vladivostok."

K. Takahashi, the Japanese financier, arrived at the Holland House from Boston yesterday afternoon accompanied by Eki Hioki, Secretary of the Japanese Legation at Washington. They were soon joined by several New York Japanese, among them being K. J. Imanishi, President of the Yokohama Specie Bank.

The pockets of all were bulging with telegrams, letters, and notes of congratulations received during the day. One of these was a cablegram, received by Mr. Takahashi from the Governor of the Bank of Japan, Tokio, expressing gratification at the splendid victory.

"If peace is declared," said Mr. Takahashi, "it is likely another large loan will be floated to take up the present loans at a cheaper rate of interest. The first loans were made on a 6 per cent. basis, the second loan at 4½ per cent., and I believe a cheaper rate of interest can be had."

Mr. Imanishi was delighted over the war news.

"Japanese bonds went up four points to-day," said he. "I am very glad for the bondholders. I confess to being surprised over the outcome of the great sea battle."

"Admiral Togo does not present the picture of the great sea general one would imagine," said Secretary Hioki. "He is small, stocky, and has very little to say. This latter characteristic was forcibly illustrated in his acceptance of the command of the navy. At a conference between the Emperor and Ministers it was decided that Togo was the man to command the navy. A messenger was sent to him when he was in charge of one of the marine depots asking him to come to Tokio to confer with the Minister of Marine. When Togo came he listened attentively, and when the Minister finished he asked, 'Is that all you have to say?' The Minister said it was. 'Well, that will be all right,' said Togo. 'Good-bye,' and bowing low he left the room.

"Being anxious to know what methods Togo expected to pursue the Emperor suggested to the Minister of Marine a second interview. So a messenger was dispatched a second time to Togo. Arriving there he found Togo taking command of the fleet. It was unceremonious. He did it in a few words. He called all his officers and men about him, and these are the instructions he gave:

"'Don't write any more letters home; let this be your last. Don't read newspapers. Smoke, eat, and be merry, and await orders.'

"This was the information the aide-de-camp communicated to the Minister of Marine. Togo's motto is, 'Be firm, but kind.'"

Consul General Uchida said last night that this was the first time in the history of the armored navies of the world that a battleship had been captured.

Baron Kaneko, who lives at Madison Avenue and Sixty-third Street, held an informal reception to his countrymen last night. Later he filled several social engagements, at which he was the recipient of many congratulations. He said that he felt that the victory placed Japan forever among the leading powers that will in the future shape the world's history.

JAPAN'S BONDS LEAP TO FAVOR.

News of Victory Creates Active Demand for War Securities.

The news of the Japanese victory was reflected in the stock market by a general advance in prices and by great activity and strength in the Japanese bonds. The London market led the advance and our own responded despite the fact that the news came just before a holiday, when so many traders are disinclined to increase their commitments in the market. While opinion among bankers was divided as to the probable effect of the victory, it was the belief of a majority that Togo's victory meant the early termination of the war, and that the re-establishment of peace would prove a stimulating factor in all the markets of the world.

At the opening of the stock market the whole list under the lead of the international issues, which had already advanced in London, rose a point or more, and in the new Japanese bonds the opening gain amounted to 4 points. The trading in both the issues of 6 per cent. bonds and in the new 4½s was very active, but the latter received most attention. They had been selling under the subscription price because of the uncertainty attending the approaching battle, and when the results became known it was naturally this issue which profited most. Both series of the 6s showed a net gain of 3⅝ points, while the 4½s retained all of their initial advance.

The market although strong was not very active, the total transactions amounting to only 507,000 shares, a little more than was done last Friday without anything to stimulate the market such as yesterday's news of the Japanese victory. This was due partly to the fact that the market was a holiday one and partly owing to the attention given to the trading in Japanese bonds. Owing to the activity in these the bond department transactions footed up over $6,500,000 as compared with less than $2,500,000 last Friday.

CHICAGO QUOTATION SUIT.

Illinois Court Has Jurisdiction in Case of Hammond Elevator.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The Supreme Court of the United States to-day reversed the decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, dismissing for want of jurisdiction the case of the Board of Trade of Chicago against the Hammond Elevator Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company, and remanded the case for further proceedings.

The question involved is one of jurisdiction. The elevator company has its headquarters at Hammond, Ind., and contended that its "correspondents" in Illinois were not its "agents." The business of the company was to take orders for the purchase and sale of stocks and grain, the orders of customers being transmitted over the wires of the Western Union Telegraph Company from the various offices of "correspondents" to Hammond, Ind.

The decision, which gives the Illinois court jurisdiction, was not concurred in by Chief Justice Fuller and Justices Harlan and Day.

CITY OWNERSHIP SAFEGUARD.

James Dalrymple Tells Chicago People It Is the Civil Service.

CHICAGO, May 29.—James Dalrymple, the street railway expert from Glasgow, upon whom Mayor Dunne is depending for details that are to aid in making municipal ownership practicable in this city, arrived to-day. He will be asked to make a thorough inspection of the Adams Street Line after a few preliminary conferences.

"I do not understand why the people of America cannot achieve success along lines followed in Great Britain," he said. "I know you are supposed to have more politics here, and that you fear the taking over of the traction lines will mean the upbuilding of a strong political machine, but have you not an antidote for this trouble? I refer to your Civil Service system. In Glasgow we do not have the disease, and are minus the antidote, but if you have the malady here I believe that in Civil Service you have the specific."

MISSING FROM OYSTER BAY.

B. Kissam, Who Is Said to Have Once Rebuffed Mr. Roosevelt.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., May 29.—Bernard Kissam, a contractor and builder, has been missing from his home at The Cove since a week from last Saturday, and his relatives and friends are afraid he may have been murdered. He is supposed to have had about $250 with him when he disappeared, having drawn the money to pay his workmen. His brother, William Kissam, came here to-day from Great Neck, to make inquiries about him.

The missing man is unmarried, and lived in a boarding house at The Cove. He left the house without saying when he would return, and it was supposed that he would be back at night as usual. No cause for his disappearance is known.

Kissam was arrested several years ago for threatening to shoot Dr. David Doty for alleged trespassing on the Youngs estate, which is near Sagamore Hill, President Roosevelt's home. It is said that he also on one occasion ordered Mr. Roosevelt off the property.

FIGHTING FOR MRS. ROGERS.

Woman Plans to Appeal the Case to United States Supreme Court.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn, May 29.—Mrs. William J. Blickensderfer, who has been raising funds to carry on the fight in behalf of Mary Rogers of Vermont, convicted of killing her husband, said to-night that she intended to take the case to the United States Supreme Court. Mrs. Blickensderfer was in New York to-day, consulting with club women there and raising funds. Attorney McCarthy of Hoosick Falls, N. Y., will be here to-morrow to confer with her in regard to the case.

In the event of being unable to get the case before the United States Supreme Court the money raised will go to Mrs. Rogers's mother and other relatives who are in miserable circumstances.

FRIENDS HONOR DR. EMMET.

Archbishop Farley Speaks at Dinner to Famous Surgeon.

Dr. Thomas Addis Emmet, for many years a physician in this city, was honored on his seventy-seventh birthday last night at a dinner given at Delmonico's by his medical friends. About 125 guests were present.

Dr. Emmet was escorted to the dinner by Archbishop Farley, who pronounced the blessing and also made a brief speech. Dr. E. C. Dudley of Chicago made the address of introduction. Others who spoke were Dr. W. M. Polk, Dr. W. H. Baker of Boston, Dr. S. C. Gordon of Portland, Me.; Dr. George T. Harrison, and Dr. F. J. Quinlan.

In his remarks Archbishop Farley said: "I never felt more of a layman than I do at this dinner given to the eminent physician, Dr. Emmet. Honor is due to him who stands at the head of the medical profession. What he has achieved in literature, medicine, and surgery is more than sufficient for any one man. He has lifted up for himself a monument for work that will stand long when he is in his grave."

SCHOONER AND 200 MEN LOST

No Trace for Many Weeks of French Boat Cousins Rennis.

Special to The New York Times.

SYDNEY, Nova Scotia, May 29.—News of a fishing disaster in which nearly 200 lives were lost has been brought here by the French cruiser Troude, which has just arrived. For the past week the Troude has been cruising about the Grand Banks in a vain search for the French fishing schooner Cousins Rennis, which left France six weeks ago with a large quantity of supplies and 160 men to replenish the St. Pierre fishing fleet.

Failing to arrive at St. Pierre within the usual time, the authorities both at St. Pierre and in France became uneasy, and the Government sent instruction to the Troude to begin a search for the Cousins Rennis. After cruising about the Grand Banks and the Newfoundland coast for a week the cruiser could find no trace of the missing vessel, and it is believed she was sunk with all on board.

HOW JAPANESE GUNNERS GAINED THEIR ACCURACY

Spent Hours of Hard Work at Sub-Calibre Practice.

COST COMPARATIVELY SMALL

A Miniature Gun Is Mounted on a Big One and Is Discharged at Short-Range Target.

The secret of the remarkable gunnery of the Japanese Navy was revealed yesterday by a retired officer of the United States Navy. In all of the hotels and public resorts where the great victory of Admiral Togo was discussed by groups almost invariably some one propounded the inquiry, How was it possible for the Japanese to sink such a fleet as the Russians had with a loss to themselves proportionately so small? It was in response to such a query that the retired officer of the United States Navy, who took part in such a discussion at the Hoffman House, gave the following interesting explanation:

"If the Japanese are not at the present time the most accurate and deadly gunners in the world it is due to the fact that of late the Americans and English have adopted a scheme of target practice which was originated by the Japanese. One day about two years ago a Chinese Admiral received the American and English commanders on the Asiatic station aboard his ship for a friendly visit. The Chinese commander mentioned that he had observed Japanese war vessels using new tactics. He said that twice he had passed Japanese warships when the men were being put through drills which had mystified him. He had noticed that they went through all the motions of gun crews when about to discharge one of the big guns in target practice, but instead of the big gun being discharged there was a report which did not sound any louder than a rifle. He asked the English and American commanders if they could enlighten him as to what the new tactics of the Japanese were. They were unable to give him any information on the subject.

"Both the English and the American commanders decided that they would take the first opportunity of finding out the nature of the performance which the Chinese Admiral had witnessed.

"Through persistent and cautious inquiry they unraveled the mystery. They learned that on every one of the large calibre guns on the Japanese battleships and cruisers there had been placed a miniature gun. For hours at a time, day after day, the Japanese would engage in target practice with these miniature guns.

"They would shoot at a target which would be placed at distances which would be in the same proportion to the carrying power of the miniature gun as one, two, three, four or five miles, we will say, would be to the big gun. The gun crew would go through exactly the same drill preparatory to discharging the miniature gun as it would if the big gun of which the small gun was the counterpart was to be fired.

"The cost of such target practice was trifling as compared with the cost of using the big gun, and so expense put no limit to the number of shots that could be fired. The gunners would shoot the small gun on the dip and rise of the vessel, when she listed, in heavy and calm seas, until they became so expert that their percentage was phenomenal.

"Both the American and the English commanders were very much impressed with the Japanese idea, and the English commander wrote to the Admiralty and the American to the Navy Department to get permission to try the Japanese plan. The English commander got the desired permission, but it was refused to the American commander. He was told that in the opinion of the Navy Department it would be better to have the men practice with the big guns. He would not be stinted in ammunition for all of the target practice which he thought it necessary for his crew to have, he was told.

"Some months later the American officer was either recalled or came home on a furlough. One of his first acts was to go to the Navy Department to urge those in charge to reconsider their decision not to permit the adoption of the Japanese plan of target practice. He dwelt enthusiastically on the advantages of the plan, as he saw them. The saving of ammunition, he said, was not the thing that appealed to him at all. The great consideration, he argued, was that the ability to fire the miniature gun so much oftener than it was possible to discharge the big gun was bound to make the gunners more accurate marksmen. Failing to convince the Ordnance Department, he went to the Secretary of the Navy. His arguments to that official were equally ineffectual.

"Leaving the department discouraged, the officer said: 'I'll be hanged if I don't go direct to Theodore Roosevelt,' he said. He did so. The President listened to him with the greatest interest.

"'We must try that,' he said. 'How would you like to try it on the Kentucky?'"

"The officer said he would be pleased to do so. He was given the authority. A miniature of one of the Kentucky's big guns was made and set up, and a gun crew assigned to it. After three weeks of drill that crew had increased its percentage of hits with the big gun over 20 per cent. The plan of the Japanese had been fully justified. It is now in use on other ships of our navy.

"It was the deadly accuracy they acquired by constant use of their miniature guns which enabled the Japanese to use their big guns against Rojestvensky with such terrible effect."

DURHAM'S LAST DITCH YIELDED TO MAYOR

Philadelphia Boss Makes a Spectacular Surrender.

RING'S PLEDGE TO WEAVER

His Appointees to be Confirmed, and Court Proceedings to be Settled—Reformers Not to Stop Work.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—The retreat which the organization began on Saturday became a rout to-day, and its opposition to Mayor Weaver has collapsed at every point. The crash came in the following statement, given out by Israel W. Durham at 3 o'clock this afternoon:

"I have advised all my friends not to oppose the confirmation of Mr. Potter as Director of Public Safety and Mr. Acker as Director of Public Works if their names are sent to Select Council by the Mayor."

This means vastly more than the mere words signify. It means that on every point the organization has withdrawn opposition, and that the Mayor will be permitted to do exactly as he pleases. He has a free hand, and is to-day the first Mayor of Philadelphia, since the city came into the control of bosses, who is his own master absolutely. The fight is ended.

The action taken was for the purpose of saving the organization from wreck. It was taken because Durham had at last been brought to realize the meaning of the words "public sentiment," and to understand that in those words there is a power. He saw that his machine would be irreparably smashed if he persisted in his course, and he surrendered to save it.

Durham's plan is to have the organization become entirely quiescent, and let the Mayor do his worst. He hopes that Weaver will make mistakes. He still thinks the Mayor a weak man, and believes that his head has been turned by the praise he has been receiving.

Hope in Summer Apathy.

Besides this, Durham hopes for a subsidence of the popular wrath when it is no longer excited by opposition. The Summer months constitute a period in which it is almost impossible to interest Philadelphia in politics. With a dormant machine and Weaver making mistakes, Durham looks for a Summer apathy.

A third consideration is that in the Summer the Mayor's advisers will all be out of town. John C. Winston, Chairman of the Committee of Seventy, is going to Europe this week. In rapid succession the others who have given their counsel to Weaver will disappear from the city, and Durham believes that there are many possibilities in that situation.

It is seriously proposed to have Councils adjourn the first week in June. The idea is being discussed of having them confirm Potter and Acker, and adjourn on the day they meet. The scheme is to do everything possible to refrain from exciting antagonism or criticism, and it is realized that if Councils remained in session it would be difficult to avoid mistakes.

Durham's plan of surrender was made yesterday at Atlantic City, when he consulted with David H. Lane and other men whose opinions are valued by the organization. He came back this morning and went to the Betz Building, where the usual crowd which comes daily to the boss for instructions was waiting. Durham spoke to them in his usual unemotional way, and then entered his private office, where he sent for the ward leaders.

Every leader in the city, except a few who had been in Durham's confidence before he began to execute his new move, and therefore did not need to be told, came to the office. Durham saw each one separately, and as soon as he had told the leader his plans sent him out and called in another.

Then began a rush to the City Hall. As soon as a leader was released by Durham he would rush over to Weaver's office and assure the Mayor of his support. This was all in accordance with Durham's orders; he wanted the surrender to be as public and spectacular as possible.

Vare Apparently Deserts.

The first to come was Select Councilman Joseph H. Brown of the Thirty-first Ward. Then came Recorder of Deeds William S. Vare, who informed the Mayor that his brother, Senator George A. Vare, would support the confirmations of Potter and Acker.

This announcement created a genuine sensation, for as yet Durham's hand in the matter was not known, and the Vares are among the most conspicuous leaders of the organization. They control the whole Councilmanic vote in South Philadelphia, and to have them apparently desert Durham made it appear that Weaver was capturing the whole orgazination. Vare, indeed, insisted that he still stood by Durham, but this seemed impossible, and it was the excitement created by Vare's action which led Durham later to issue his statement explaining the course he had taken.

After Vare the leaders came in a rush, and it was soon evident that the great fight was over and that the Mayor had won every point at issue.

The injunction case before Judge Ralston will probably be withdrawn. That is the present intention of the leaders. In any case the decision will be favorable to the Mayor.

The Committee of Seventy met this afternoon and adopted resolutions beginning with this sentence:

In this supreme hour of victory over the forces of greed the Committee of Seventy tenders to the Hon. John Weaver, Mayor of Philadelphia, the heartfelt acknowledgments of a grateful constituency.

The Committee's Pledges.

It then pledged its best efforts to the promotion of the following objects:

1. The election of the people's choice for Sheriff in November.
2. The election of another honest and courageous Mayor to succed John Weaver.
3. The election of Councilmen truly representing the people.
4. Purging of the Assessors' lists.
5. The absolute divorce of the police from politics.
6. Personal registration of voters for the cities of the Commonwealth.
7. The enforcement in good faith of civil service rules.
8. The exclusion of Councilmen from any other office.
9. The repeal of the iniquitous amendment to the Bullitt bill, whereby the Mayor is to be shorn of the very power to which the people have just appealed with such glorious results.

The allusion in the last paragraph is to the Ripper bill. The committee announces that it will welcome any honorable alliance, but will not suffer any group of politicians to control its action, "and will not stand sponsor for any exchange of political bosses."

The jealousies between the Committee of Seventy and the Committee of Nine were suppressed at least for the time. The Committee of Nine met before the Committee of Seventy did, and adopted resolutions declaring that it would go on with its work. This tended to prevent any attempt to sidetrack that committee, and the Committee of Seventy adopted resolutions declaring that reform movements had been too often imperiled by jealousies, and that charity should be exercised in forming judgments.

Councilmen Sullen.

From now on the efforts of the reformers will be directed to making the collapse of the ring complete and preventing any attempt on the part of the beaten organization to get together. They will be aided considerably by the circumstance that there is already trouble within the ranks of the organization. Many of the Councilmen are sullen over Durham's action in permitting them to incur all the opprobrium attached to the support of the gas lease when the issue of the fight was surrender.

The feeling is that if Durham must surrender he ought to have foreseen that termination far enough in advance to save his Councilmen from becoming targets of public scorn.

The rush of telegrams and letters indorsing Mayor Weaver's course continued to-day and among them was one from Gov. Folk of Missouri, which read:

Keep up the fight. The task will sometimes seem hard and the way dark, but remember no matter how mighty the forces of corruption may be, you have behind you the strongest machine in the world—the hearts and consciences of the people of America.

The ministers of Philadelphia are disposed to ascribe the result to the prayers they offered for Mr. Weaver, and there are a good many politicians who are not especially devout, who think the ministers are right. Some time ago the ministers all over Philadelphia on a given Sunday offered prayers that Mayor Weaver might be gifted from on high with a strengthened backbone.

Preachers Praise Mayor.

Mr. Weaver is so strong a churchman that he felt worse over this incident than over any other attack that was made upon him in the period of his subserviency to the ring, and some politicians think that prayer had a strong influence on his mind. It is only fair to say, however, that at that very time Mr. Weaver probably had in contemplation a break with the ring at the earliest practicable moment.

The Ministers of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Baptist denominations met to-day in their respective headquarters and passed resolutions praising the Mayor's stand. To the Presbyterians the Rev. W. Y. Brown said:

"We have prayed long and earnestly that the Lord would give Mayor John Weaver more backbone—all the clergymen of the city have lifted their voices in like supplication—and our prayers have been answered."

At the meeting of the Baptist ministers a strong eulogy of the Mayor was delivered by the Rev. Samuel Dean, who not long ago advocated the burning of Mayor Weaver in effigy.

The Mayor still has his veto of the gas lease in readiness, though there is no longer any prospect that he will be called on to use it. He is taking no chances. The ring's intention is to have Councils at their meeting on Thursday pass a resolution recalling the ordinance. Should they fail to do so, of course the veto will be sent in. It has been written.

Mayor Weaver was asked to-day if he would carry on the gas lease fight against the organization in face of Durham's statement. After giving the question a moment's thought Mayor Weaver replied:

"I cannot say what I will do until I know positively that Mr. Durham has made such assurances."

"Have you prepared a veto on the gas lease ordinance?"

"I have a veto ready and will use it if necessary."

"Have you heard that City Councils may pass a resolution on Thursday to recall the ordinance?"

"Yes."

"Suppose they meet and immediately adjourn without adopting the resolution to recall—would not the gas-lease ordinance become a law if you did have it then with your veto attached?"

"I shall have the ordinance ready for them even should they meet and ajourn within thirty seconds' time."

"Will you send the reason for your veto with the ordinance?"

"I have answered that question once before, and I say again, if necessary."

The Mayor left it to be assumed that he is waiting for the leaders of City Councils to seek him and assure him that the resolution of recall will be passed providing that he withhold the reasons for his veto.

There seems to be little doubt that rather than have the Mayor's veto made a part of the records of Councils Durham and his allies will endeavor to prevail on the Mayor to consent to the withdrawal of the ordinance.

Mayor Weaver was also asked if he proposed to make any changes in the police force and other departments, and replied:

"I would rather not discuss that question now. I will announce in plenty of time any changes that may occur."

City Party Reorganizes.

The City Party held a convention to-night and organized as a practically new party. Much enthusiasm was shown, and rules were adopted based on those of the Republican machine.

The old City Party is the basis of this one, of course, and there is practically no difference except in the more favorable circumstances attending the organization of the new one. A City Committee was created and plans were begun for the bringing into politics of a party organization which can oppose the ring. The Committee of Seventy will control the City Party.

The mass meetings showed a considerable diminution in attendance, owing partly to the hot weather and partly to Durham's surrender, which deprived the citizens of the main reason for flocking to the ward meetings. The enthusiasm, however, showed no falling off.

The "War Fund" to fight the ring continues to grow. The Public Ledger to-day received $523, two of the contributions to which were of $200 and $100 respectively. The rest of The Ledger's receipts ranged all the way down to $1, but five-dollar bills were most numerous.

No Weaver Mass Meeting Here.

The proposed mass meeting on Wednesday evening in Cooper Union to give countenance and aid to Mayor Weaver of Philadelphia has been abandoned. The Committee of Arrangements found that the Philadelphia Mayor was too busy to visit New York, and the purpose for which the meeting was originally called had been accomplished.

GRUBER SAVAGELY ATTACKS JEROME

Says the District Attorney Has a "Soiled Brain."

CLUB STANDS BY MATHEWS

Passes Resolutions Declaring Belief in His Innocence and Applauds Abuse It Hears.

District Attorney Jerome was accused of having had Armitage Matthews, Secretary of the Republican County Committee, indicted from political motives, in a speech by Col. Abraham Gruber at a meeting last night of the Riverside Republican Club of the Twenty-first District, of which Col. Gruber is the leader. Col. Gruber gave his version of the Wooten-Matthews-Ferguson situation and dared Jerome to go further. He also recalled the Thomas A. Fulton incident of 1902 and referred to the career of "Sleuth" Jacobs. The club passed resolutions on the subject which said:

Whereas, These charges were based on the testimony of one David Rothschild, a convicted thief, a confessed perjurer, and admitted embezzler, and the request of our fellow-members to be permitted to go before the said Grand Jury and submit himself for examination was refused;

Resolved, That in our judgment of our fellow-member we choose to be guided by our knowledge of his character and his life among us rather than prejudiced against him by indictments founded on evidence rejected by two successive Grand Juries and consisting mainly of the testimony of a confessed perjurer and convicted thief; and be it further

Resolved, That we assure our fellow-member of our sincere belief in his entire innocence of the charges preferred against him, and predict for him a triumphant acquittal should such indictments ever be brought to trial; and be it further

Resolved, That we denounce the action of all parties concerned in refusing to our fellow-member the opportunity to be heard before the May Grand Jury.

In offering his resolutions, Congressman Bennett said: "This indictment was found on the testimony of a thief, an embezzler, and convict. I deem it a privilege to offer these resolutions. Mr. Mathews is a friend of mine, and I have every confidence in his integrity."

Col. Gruber, who presided, declared he intended to call a spade a spade, and after the adoption of the resolutions he sailed in. Among other things, he said:

"A man who has always stood by his friends has the right to expect them to stand by him, and our friend Mathews may be assured that we will stand by him like brothers. We know he is honest. The word of a confessed thief and perjurer combined with the scheming of a District Attorney with a soiled brain will not avail against the right.

"We all know how a man named Jacobs testified in a certain case. We know how men were convicted on his evidence. We know that charges were made from time to time that Jacobs was a perjurer, and that Jerome defended him. It all ended in Jacobs admitting his perjury. It is bad enough for an ordinary man to commit perjury, but when a member of the District Attorney's staff perjures himself and is let off with a sentence of only one year it is time that we reflected.

"It is a fact that more than 60 per cent. of indictments found under Jerome have failed of conviction. No decent District Attorney of New York ever before indicted a man of Mathews's position without a hearing. The whole matter is political—to prevent investigation at the right time of Jerome's official acts, and also the receipt of moneys of which he knows I have knowledge and of which I intend to make use.

"I have in my office a letter signed by David Rothschild, showing that when Mathews, the representative of the surety company that was sponsor for Rothschild's acts, was about to examine the box in which Rothschild kept the securities of the Wessell estate, he (Rothschild) raised $50,000 in order to buy back securities which had been hypothecated. Would he have done that if Mathews were in league with him?

"The only thread on which the alleged connection of Mathews and Rothschild was hung was the fact that Mathews and Wooten, the Federal Bank's attorney, were friends. Wooten and Mathews had had various business transactions during the fifteen years of their friendship, and there was a matter of $3,000 between them.

"Jerome gets Rothschild (his new Jacobs) to swear that he (Rothschild) had an understanding by which this $3,000 was paid for permission to steal $97,000.

"I also have a letter signed by Rothschild in which he says that six months ago he was visited in Sing Sing by an Assistant District Attorney and asked to testify against Mathews on the promise that Jerome would cease to prosecute him for the stealings from the Wessell estate and would secure a commutation of his sentence:

"Jerome could have any of us indicted. He has the power. For two years he has been breaking his neck to get the Tammany Hall nomination for District Attorney. We know how he made combinations and failed to enforce the excise law. I repeat, he has a soiled brain. He will attack any weak man he thinks he can whip. I have said enough to-night to be indicted for slander, but I challenge Jerome to have me indicted. I have written down what I am saying to-night, and will keep the copy carefully."

Col. Gruber's remarks were applauded. When asked if District Attorney Jerome knew of the existence of the letters referred to by him, he said:

"Yes, and that is why he refused Mathews the right to a hearing. I showed them to the April Grand Jury and an indictment was refused by that body."

JEROME ON RUNNING A CITY.

Tells Boston Club to Use Criminal Law and Newspapers.

BOSTON, May 29.—District Attorney Jerome of New York was the guest of honor and principal speaker to-night at the first banquet of the newly organized Boston City Club, and his address on municipal and National government and citizenship was received with cheers.

Because the club was new, Mr. Jerome said, he would take the liberty of giving some advice. In doing so he urged members to keep politics outside and to use the criminal law and the newspapers with the utmost freedom in "jacking up" lax and corrupt officeholders. He said that the utter destruction of the power of the great political parties in local affairs was the greatest object any city club could aim for, and he cited many reasons to support this argument, the principal one being that the people should have men of their own choice representing them.

His arraignment of the New York police force was severe.

IMMIGRANTS' RECORD YEAR.

Total May Exceed 1,000,000, Commissioner Sargent Estimates.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—"There is a good prospect," said the Commissioner General of Immigration, Mr. Sargent, today, "that there will be over a million immigrants in the year, including the past and the coming six months. Russian immigration is rapidly increasing, and Austria, Finland, and Italy are pouring future citizens into this country at an unprecedented rate.

"The returns for the six months ended April 30 show an aggregate immigration amounting to 521,320, an increase of 52 per cent. over that of the same period last year and of 29 per cent. over the corresponding period in 1903. Russia sent us in the six months 85,806, an increase of 85 per cent. over last year.

"The dishonests were 4,946, about one-third more than last year. The number of immigrants during April was 137,084. From Russia in that month there came 19,505. Ireland sent 7,962, Japan 1,161, England 4,755, Germany 3,933, Greece 2,989, and Austria-Hungary 37,289. The largest immigration from any country came from Italy, when the population of the United States was increased by 41,436 souls."

ATLANTIC WINS THE KAISER'S CUP

her passage. She replied by code, "Very good."

Asked as to accidents, she answered, "There were none."

Questioned as to her best day's run, she signaled "341."

Her port was inquired for, and she answered "Southampton."

When news of her arrival was flashed to the Lizard the Earl of Lonsdale, coming on board the Norseman, ordered steam up to go out to meet her. With him went Sir Edward Birbeck, Capt. Coerper, and Charles L. F. Robinson, the member of the American committee who had crossed from America a month before, and was the guest of Lord Lonsdale on the yacht.

The Atlantic was seen some ten miles out making slow headway in the light wind, and presented a beautiful picture. All sail was set to catch the slightest zephyr that would help her on her way, while from her peak halyards floated the American ensign.

As the Norseman ran within hailing distance of her, congratulations were signaled, and she answered her thanks. On her foremast she flew the burgee of the New York Yacht Club, while she carried as well the Larchmont flag and the international code signal, "K. S. R. B."

Crowds lined the cliffs meantime near the light to await her coming, and keen was the disappointment of every one when she failed to appear before dusk. Besides the German cruiser in its place on the finish line many yachts gathered, several running up the American flag in honor of the victor.

GERMANY DISAPPOINTED.

Expected Hamburg to Win—Calls Atlantic's Time Phenomenal.

BERLIN, May 30.—The victory of the American yacht Atlantic in the race for the Emperor's Cup is a bitter disappointment to German yachtsmen, who had expected the success of the German yacht Hamburg from some of the late steamer reports. The news of the Atlantic's finish reached Berlin too late for much comment in the morning papers, but the Tageblatt calls the time record absolutely phenomenal.

NEWS CAME AS A SURPRISE.

No One Expected Yacht to Finish for Another Day.

Wilson Marshall's three-masted schooner the Atlantic, sailed by Capt. Barr of international America's Cup fame, thus carries off the five-thousand-dollar gold cup offered by the German Emperor to the winning boat, in 12 days, 4 hours, and 3 minutes, breaking the best previous record for a transatlantic passage under sail by 1 day 16 hours and 38 minutes. The former record was held by another contestant in the race, Commodore George Lauder, Jr.'s, yacht Endymion, which was last reported when seven days out nearly a day's run behind the Marshall schooner.

The Atlantic reached the Scilly Islands at 9:37 o'clock yesterday morning, Greenwich time. Although the Lizard is but forty-eight miles distant it took her nearly twelve hours to make the distance, the wind at the last minute dying down almost to a zephyr, and the tide changing to oppose her progress. It seemed as though the elements had united to prevent her record-breaking achievement at the last minute, after favoring her with unusual fair westerly winds for ten days of the passage. The time at the finish line, as officially reported from the German cruiser Pfeil, was 9:18 P. M. Allowing for the difference between Greenwich and Washington time, this would mean that from the start of the race at 12:15 P. M. on May 17, the Atlantic had occupied 12 days 4 hours and 3 minutes, completing the journey at 4:18 o'clock as recorded in New York.

Hardly had this welcome intelligence been received by the Marshall followers than the cable came announcing the appearance of Capt. Barr's boat off the Scilly Islands.

As far as the winning of the race was concerned, this information decided the contest, though it was not for twelve long hours that the American schooner was able to reach the finish line. Up until that time there was no sign of any other contender for the trophy, and it seemed likely that Capt. Barr would have an advantage of fully a day over his nearest rival.

The time caused astonishment everywhere. In spite of the head winds against which the boats had to contend for nearly thirty hours at the start, and which enabled them to make less than two hundred miles during the first day, the Atlantic had completed the passage of 3,020 miles in twelve days' time. Had it not been for the falling off of the wind in the last twelve hours she would have completed the passage at least six hours sooner, while with favorable breezes from the start it is likely that eleven days would have been her passage time. This is considered to be a remarkable showing for even so wonderful a boat as William Gardner has produced.

The average day's run made by the Atlantic was 250 miles in direct line. The average in knots per hour would be slightly over ten, while allowing for the distance which the boat was compelled to sail out of her course, she must have logged easily ten and a half knots during the entire time.

PARTY ON THE ATLANTIC.

New Yorkers Accompanied Wilson Marshall in the Trip Across.

On board the Atlantic with Wilson Marshall, her owner, was a party of six friends, who had been invited to accompany him on the trip. They were F. M. Hoyt, C. B. Seeley, H. A. Bergman, Morton W. Smith, L. B. Ostrander, and Dr. F. B. Downs. To them the race will be an occasion that must remain in their memory while life lasts. They are all well-known clubmen in New York, enthusiastic yachtsmen, and thorough sportsmen. Although their trip was believed by many to be fraught with possible danger, because of the forced sail that the yacht would carry and of her heavy rig, their position was one that all envied. They will accompany Mr. Marshall to Kiel and witness the races there, and probably participate in the Dover-Heligoland contest when the Atlantic races for the second Kaiser's Cup.

Alfred Marshall, Wilson's brother, received the news of the victory by telephone at his home, in Mamaroneck, and was much elated. He said that the victory was not unexpected, if the time was, though his faith weakened somewhat during the past two days. He had received from his friends a present of a nine-foot private signal of the Atlantic, in anticipation of a victory, and to-morrow he will carry the flag on his steamer Levanter, in the New York Yacht Club races at Glen Cove. He expected a cable from his brother announcing the arrival, but up to a late hour none had been received, which is explained by the news dispatches that the yacht kept on to Southampton without stopping at the Lizard.

DESIGNER GARDNER PLEASED.

Expected Boats to Have Long Passage with Light Variable Winds.

William Gardner was amazed as well as gratified by the news of the Atlantic's victory and record. The victory he had expected, though not without some concern over the Hamburg's chances, but the time was a complete surprise. He did not believe the record would be broken. He said:

"While I am delighted at the result I am amazed at the time. Before the race started I carefully studied weather records for May for five years back. I found no winds in midocean in any year in the last half of the month. On this account I figured that the race would be a drifting match—a regular spinnaker drill—and I considered we would be lucky to get the leading boat in in eighteen days.

"When the Atlantic made the time she did at the start I cut down my estimate to fifteen days, still figuring that the last half of the journey would be slow. My cablegram this morning from the United States Naval Attaché at the Lizard that Capt. Barr had passed the Scilly Islands was a big surprise.

"I may as well confess I was afraid of the Hamburg. She is a beautiful boat, built for speed, and trimmed down to the lowest weight. I thought the extra weight we carried with our heavy cruising equipment might enable the German to beat us. I did not figure on any other winner, though of course I recognized the speed of the Hildegarde and Endymion.

ATLANTIC BUILT FOR SPEED.

Lines Are Those of a Racer, While She Carries Huge Sail Spread.

The Atlantic is a three-masted auxiliary schooner with spoon bow and a big, overhanging stern, built for speed from the designs of William Gardner of New York at the Townsend & Downey Company's shipyard at Shooter Island. Wilson Marshall, her owner, wanted a boat that could outsail anything in her class and excel the excellent record of Commodore Morton Plant's Ingomar.

In her first race for the Brenton's Reef Cup she defeated the Resolute and Endymion, sailing the course from the Reef Light to Sandy Hook and return in forty hours thirty-nine minutes and twenty-one seconds. Her average speed was 6.49 knots. The Endymion was left seventeen hours behind.

The two boats met again in the Cape May Cup race and the Atlantic once more was victorious, sailing the 220 miles to Cape May and return in 38 hours 33 minutes and 16 seconds, leaving the Endymion twenty-two miles astern on the outward journey and beating her one hour, five minutes and two seconds home.

Her over-all dimension is 187 feet, while she measures 137 feet on the water line. Her beam is 29 feet 9 inches and her draught 15 feet. Her centreboard has a nine-foot drop.

Her ordinary sail spread is 20,000 square feet of canvas. While on the trials where she has made her highest recorded speed she has carried no topsail, using only fore, main, and mizzen sails, working staysail and jib, about one-half of her capacity. She carries, all told, 38,000 square feet of canvas which she might spread at one time.

PREVIOUS RACE RECORDS.

Earlier Transatlantic Contests and the Time Made by the Endymion.

The Kaiser Cup race is the fourth transatlantic race between sailing yachts, and the second international contest. The first was in 1866, between the Vesta, Henrietta, and Fleetwing, and was won by the Henrietta in 13 days 21 hours 55 minutes. It was sailed from Sandy Hook to the Lizard.

The best previous time made for the passage across was the record of the Endymion from Sandy Hook Lightship to the Needles, 13 days 20 hours 36 minutes. The Endymion sailed to the Needles, 145 miles east of the Lizard, where the Atlantic finished, but even under the adverse weather conditions, against which the Atlantic had to contend from the Scilly Islands to the Lizard, she would have beaten the Endymion's time by almost a day and a half.

ARRESTED AT Y. M. C. A.

Door Smashed In—Visitor Fights with the Janitor.

In front of a door with a freshly broken panel on the fifth floor of the Young Men's Christian Association, 215 West Twenty-third Street, a well-dressed man was found about 11 o'clock last night. According to the watchman, Morris Landsman, the man refused to give a satisfactory reason for being there.

The two clenched and fought all over the corridor, the watchman said, with the result that he hustled the other man to the elevator, and thence to the street, where he was arrested by Policeman Bleshely. The prisoner wore a brown suit, spats with patent leathers, and a straw hat. He was held as a "suspicious person." He declared that he was Robert C. Banks of 49 West Thirtieth Street, a buyer for a large wholesale house.

HONOR TO COMMODORE BARRY

Catholics at Allegheny City Would Change American Naval History.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 29.—Believing that to Commodore Jack Barry and not to John Paul Jones belongs the honor of being considered the Father of the American Navy, Pittsburg Catholics are preparing to circulate a petition for presentation to President Roosevelt, setting forth Commodore Barry's right to the distinction.

The matter was discussed at a gathering of the Allegheny County Federation of Catholic Societies to-day. A mass-meeting will be held June 18 to give the public a better insight into Barry's history. For years Catholics have avowed that Commodore Barry was not given the prominence in historical works that his deeds and patriotism warranted.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF SUITS.

Supreme Court Grants Rehearing of Cases Involving War Duty.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The United States Supreme Court to-day granted a partial re-hearing in the cases of Lincoln vs. the United States and Warner, Barnes & Co. vs. the United States, known as the Philippine tariff cases. They involve the question of President McKinley's order of 1898 relative to duty on American goods shipped into the Philippine Islands during the war. The order granting the petition specifies that the argument shall be "solely as to whether Congress ratified the collection of the sums and whether it had power to do so." The suits are for the refunding of duties, amounting to about $7,000,000.

FISHING STEAMER ASHORE.

The Seaconnec Grounds Near Shinnecock Light—Crew All Safe.

Special to The New York Times.

EASTPORT, L. I., May 29.—The fishing steamer Seaconnec, Capt. Fish of Greenport, ran aground a half mile east of Shinnecock Light at 8 o'clock to-night in a dense fog.

The Shinnecock Life Saving Station crew rowed their boat through the light surf to the imperiled vessel, and brought the Captain and the crew of twenty men ashore.

The steamer was half full of water, which almost precludes any chance of saving her. She hails from Promised Land and is owned by Hiram Luther of Greenport. The Captain said the thick weather had caused him to lose his bearings.

SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS FRANCHISE TAX LAW

Grout Expects to Collect $24,000,000 for the City.

METROPOLITAN MAY FIGHT

Hopes to Retain Part of Taxes for the Years When Realty Was Not Assessed at Full Value.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—By a unanimous decision the United States Supreme Court to-day affirmed the decision of the New York State Court of Appeals in the franchise tax cases, involving about $24,000,000 of taxes due the City of New York. The decision was given from the bench by Justice Brewer, who later in the day handed down his written opinion.

The ground is taken broadly in the decision that the grant of a franchise does not imply a relinquishment of the power to tax the thing granted. The court holds that if the State conveys land or issues bonds it may tax the land or the bonds. To secure exemption from the payment of taxes on lands, bonds, or franchises the grantee must be able to show an express contract by the State to the contrary.

Great interest was manifested in the decision owing to the magnitude of the interests involved. The circumstance that President Roosevelt, while Governor of New York, signed the franchise tax law and was urgent in its support also gave the matter additional interest among the President's friends.

Justice Brewer in his decision said that it was not contended by the plaintiff in error that there was any constitutional objection to the taxation of franchises. He said the main contention was that this tax legislation impaired the obligation of contracts, and added:

"It must be borne in mind that presumptively all property within the territorial limits of the State is subject to its taxing power.

"It would not be doubted that if a grant were made of specific, tangible property like a tract of land and the payment therefor was a gross sum, no implication of an exemption from taxation would arise. Whether the amount was large or small, greater or less, if the payment was distinctly the consideration of the grant, that which was granted would pass into the bulk of material property, and like all such property be subject to taxation. Nor would this result be altered by the fact that the payment was to be made annually instead of by a single sum in gross. If it was real estate it would be equivalent to the conveyance of the tract subject to ground rent, and the grantee taking the title would hold it liable to taxation upon its value. If this be true in reference to a grant of tangible property, it is equally true with respect to a grant of a franchise, for a franchise, though intangible, is none the less property and oftentimes property of great value. Indeed, growing out of the conditions of modern business, a large proportion of available property is to be found in intangible things like franchises."

Tax Not Greater Price.

Discussing the contention that when the public grants a privilege on condition of the payment of an annual sum, the contract implies that the public shall exact no larger amount for that privilege, and that to impose a tax is simply increasing the price which the grantee is called upon to pay for the privilege, he said:

"We are not disposed to undervalue the force of these situations, but it would be giving them undue significance to hold that they are potent to displace the power of the State to subject to the burdens of taxation property within its limits. The word tax is not infrequently used in a general sense as denoting a burden or charge, and not in a strict legal sense of a charge or burden imposed by the State for the purpose of revenue for its support."

To the City of New York this decision means that more than $20,000,000 taxes that have been owing from five years to one and that have been carried in the budget as assets will actually be paid into the Treasury. The amount due, according to the schedule prepared in advance by Controller Grout, is $24,008,863.21 for the five boroughs. In the sum is included 7 per cent. interest, amounting in all to $3,877,800. But the likelihood is that the city will have to agree to a settlement at somewhat reduced figures, although the Controller yesterday asserted that every cent would be collected.

The first step to reap these millions will be made on June 15, unless the corporations concerned have paid up before that time. Then Controller Grout will put the taxes and interest due for the years of 1900 and 1901 up at auction sale and sell them to the highest bidder in accordance with law. The reason that the sale will be restricted to two years is that overdue taxes do not become a lien on the taxed property until they have been overdue three years. The total amount of taxes and interest to be advertised for sale will be $10,989,857.05.

The Controller does not expect to have to go so far as that except in a few cases. He said yesterday that he believed that a stream of coin would be turned into the city coffers at once as a result of the decision by the United States Supreme Court. This, he declared, would mean that the city finances would be put in a more prosperous condition than they have been for years. He added, too, that any impression that the proceeds of the tax constituted so much "found money" must be dispelled at once. It has all been discounted in advance, and all but a very small part of what is due has been spent, revenue bonds having been issued to cover the gap in the budget caused by the withholding of these taxes. Nevertheless the settlement of this matter means a direct gain to the city, because the interest now being paid on the bonds will be saved.

Mr. Grout admitted that the entire sum due to the city would not be collected without some additional trouble. He looks particularly to the Metropolitan Street Railway Company to make some difficulty. One chance offering itself to this corporation, Mr. Grout said yesterday, lies in the allegation of an overassessment for the first two years—the only two years for which payment can be enforced by tax sale. The taxes for those two years are based on an assessment at the full value of the property. At the same time, real estate was assessed at from 75 to 85 per cent. of the full value. The railroads, in particular, contend that the franchise tax is meant to correspond in every particular with the tax imposed on real estate, and they will demand that a corresponding reduction be granted for the years referred to. Such a claim cannot be made in regard to the last three years, because then the real estate was assessed in full, in accordance with the change in taxation methods introduced in the administration of Mayor Low.

Expects More Trouble.

Controller Grout declined to express [illegible] as to the attitude to be taken by the city toward the demand for reduction. The probability is, however, that it will have to be granted.

It was the general impression yesterday that all the corporations affected by the law have been setting aside money to meet the tax if it should be declared valid and that none of them will have any trouble in meeting the demand made on them made by the Controller. The extent to which they will now have to help the city may be had in detail by the schedule prepared by Henry P. Nichols, Chief of the Franchise Bureau of the Department of Finance.

The Taxes and Interest.

From the summarized statement of taxes and interest due in the five boroughs for the years 1900 to 1904, inclusive, are quoted here the figures for the first year and the totals:

The law which has now been upheld in the final instance by the United States Supreme Court was passed by the Legislature in 1899, Senator John Ford acting as sponsor and Gov. Roosevelt urging its passage. After its first passage several weak spots were discovered by the Governor, who promptly called a special session for the correction of these. The first levy under the new law was made in 1900. The opposition that was immidiately made by the corporations was from the very start led by the Metropolitan Street Railway Company. Payment of the taxes assessed under the law was refused on the ground of their unconstitutionality, and a test case was brought before the Supreme Court of this State. The referee appointed by Justice D Cady Herick, before whom the case appeared, was ex-Justice Robert Earl. He filed a report declaring the law constitutional. This decision was later upheld by the Court of Appeals. Then the case was carried to the United States Supreme Court. The cases were argued for the corporations by Elihu Root and W. D. Guthrie and for the State by Attorney General Mayer and Louis Marshall.

The law subjects to a system of general ad valorem taxation the special and local franchises of the public utilities, such as street cars, electric light, gas, and telephone plants occupying the public streets.

1,000 CASES PENDING.

Attorney General's Estimate of Suits Affected by Decision.

ALBANY, May 29.—Attorney General Mayer said to-night:

"There are in round numbers a thousand cases which have been awaiting this decision. In most of these cases the companies attack the amount of the assessment laid on them by the State Board. These cases will now be progressed as expeditiously as is physically possible, and I hope that it will not be long before the various localities will be enjoying the benefit of these taxes."

DIED IN HER SON'S ARMS.

Merrigan Was Carrying His Mother to St. Catharine's Hospital.

Mrs. Mary Merrigan, sixty-three years old of 82 North Sixth Street, Williamsburg, died last night in the arms of her son Robert, who was carrying her to St. Catharine's Hospital. Her death occurred at Bushwick Avenue and Grand Street. Mrs. Merrigan had apparently always been in good health until yesterday afternoon, when she expressed a wish to go to St. Catharine's Hospital.

Her son said he would accompany her. They boarded a trolley car, but when Mrs. Merrigan became seriously ill her son carried her into a drug store near by. The druggist telephoned for an ambulance, but the son became alarmed by the delay and started to carry his mother to the hospital two blocks away.

He had gone but a few steps when the ambulance appeared. Dr. Pflug found that Mrs. Merrigan was dead. The son collapsed completely and was attended by the ambulance surgeon.

New Traffic Rule Downtown.

Sergt. Snyder of the City Hall Squad of Traffic Regulators has established a new danger zone at the triangle formed by Greenwich, Fulton, and Barclay Streets. Wagons going north must hereafter keep to the right as far as Fulton Street, while those going south must keep to the right to Barclay Street.

Cheap Trips to Switchback To-day.

An opportunity to visit one of the most picturesque localities in this country is offered by the New Jersey Central Railroad, which announces that to-day it will run excursion trains to Mauch Chunk, the Switchback, and Glen Onoko, Penn. Round-trip tickets for adults are $1.50 each, and for children 75 cents. Tickets for the trip over the Switchback Railroad are 50 cents more.

L. H. SOUTHWICK GONE; MAY BE DROWNED

Resident of New York Missing Nearly a Month.

LAST SEEN IN A ROWBOAT

His Son, Searching for Him a Month, Can Find No Trace of Him.

Special to The New York Times.

GENEVA, N. Y., May 29.—L. H. Southwick of New York City, until recently owner of the Long Point Hotel, on Seneca Lake, near here, has been missing nearly a month, and his relatives believe that he was drowned. He came here the last of April to remove furniture and personal effects from the hotel, which he shipped to New York. The last seen of Mr. Southwick was on May 4, when he started to row from the hotel to Dresden in a small boat.

His son, H. L. Southwick of 116 West Eleventh Street, New York City, came here last week to make an investigation, but found no trace of his father.

Mrs. L. H. Southwick when seen at her home, 116 West Eleventh Street, last night, said she was sure her husband had met with foul play. Her son, H. L. Southwick, she said, was working with the police of Geneva in an effort to trace the movements of her husband from May 4. At that time he had written saying that he would be home in two days. Nothing had been heard from him since, and a check sent to him had not been cashed at the bank.

"The last we have heard of Mr. Southwick," she continued, "is from the caretaker of the Long Point Hotel on Seneca Lake. He says that my husband started to row across the lake on the evening of May 4. As my husband was a prudent man and knew the dangers of the lake I am afraid that the caretaker is mistaken.

"My fear is that my husband was murdered and thrown into one of the deep places in the lake, from which it would be impossible to recover the body if it were heavily weighted."

AGAINST LAND GRABBERS.

Must Answer Conspiracy Charge in Washington.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The United States Supreme Court in the cases of Frederick A. Hyde and Henry P. Dimond, charged with complicity in Western land frauds, to-day affirmed the decision of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, directing their removal to this city for trial and denying a writ of habeas corpus. They were indicted here with John A. Benson and J. T. Schneider for conspiracy to defraud the Government out of immense tracts of public lands.

The operations of the alleged conspiracy affected hundreds of thousands of acres of valuable land in California and Oregon. The men have heretofore resisted all efforts to bring them into the District of Columbia.

RULING ON LAND FRAUDS.

Purchase Money Forfeited Where Applications Prove Illegal.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Secretary Hitchcock has rendered a decision which will result in forfeiting to the Government all purchase money received with applications for timber and stone lands which are afterward found to be fraudulent.

The decision will result in many forfeitures under applications now pending.

LOOTED SHOPS WITH A BOX.

Two Young Women Slipped What They Stole Into a Slit in the Side.

Miss Rose Meenagh, detective in a Sixth Avenue department store, watched two young women yesterday afternoon. They had with them a long paper suit box, and the detective thought she saw the two young women slip something through a slit in the box now and then.

She arrested them on suspicion of shoplifting. When the box was emptied at the Tenderloin Station it had in it ten silk waists, two skirts, one stickpin, one cardcase, a knife, a file, a purse, a small Bible, and several other articles.

The prisoners described themselves as: Mabel Bennett, nineteen years old, of 307 Hudson Street, and Annie Smith, twenty-three years old, of the same address.

TURNS WATER INTO BEER.

Wisconsin Man Announces Discovery to Revolutionize Brewing.

ST. PAUL, Minn., May 29.—A dispatch from Rhinelander, Wis., says:

"A local chemist has produced a liquid which is 11,000 times stronger than the best quality of beer, and one drop of it placed in a large beer glass of ice water produces a glass of pure beer. The extract contains an alkaloid from hops 9,500 times stronger than crude hops, and the active principle of malt 12,700 times the strength of common malt. One ounce of it will make about thirty gallons of beer.

"Expert chemists connected with Milwaukee breweries ridicule the alleged discovery as an utter impossibility."

Up-State Banking House Assigns.

CORNING, N. Y., May 29.—The banking house of J. L. Cavin & Co., successors to A. C. Wilcox & Co., doing business at Painted Post and Cohocton, today assigned to Walter A. Smith of Painted Post. Cavin & Co. claim to have assets amounting to $21,000, while their liabilities, they say, will not exceed $15,000.

Graeme Stewart's Condition Critical.

CHICAGO, May 29.—Graeme Stewart, ex-Republican National Committeeman from Illinois, who is suffering from a second attack of congestion of the brain, is in a critical condition. He was attacked by acute indigestion at the banquet of the Bankers' Club last Wednesday night. The attack affected his brain.

EARNED OVER 8 PER CENT.

Report of United States Realty and Improvement Company.

The report of the United States Realty and Improvement Company for the ten months from July 1, 1904, to April 30, 1905, made public yesterday, shows gross earnings of $2,440,225, derived as follows: From investments, $1,156,790; from building contracts, $854,620; from profit on marketable securities, still held, $628,812. Deducting $320,983 for interest paid and accrued, expense of unproductive real estate and depreciation, and $414,411 for organization expenses, taxes, general office expenses, &c., the net earnings were $1,704,828, from which is deducted interest on debenture bonds and dividends on outstanding stock of subsidiary companies the sum of $560,512, leaving a surplus for the ten months of $1,144,316. This represents earnings during the ten months at the rate of over 8 per cent. per annum on the company's capital stock.

President Black in his report says: "The income of the company from fixed investments has been largely increased during the past year, and will be still further increased during the coming year by the income to be derived from the Trinity Building, Mercantile Building, Hotel Breslin and Hippodrome properties, some of which yielded little or no income during the period covered by this report. The annual income during the coming year from real estate, mortgages, stocks, bonds, and other cash investments now owned will amount to over $1,100,000 after deducting all interest on mortgages and bills payable, taxes, and carrying charges of unproductive properties. This income from investments alone will be ample to pay the interest on the debenture bonds outstanding amounting annually to $993,400, and leave a surplus which may be applied to dividends on the stock. This surplus, of course, will be increased by the net profits made in the other earning departments, and by the improvement of the other properties which are at present unproductive."

CORK OFFICIALS ACQUITTED.

Charge Was Putting Iron In Blocks Intended for Life Belts.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, May 29.—A jury in the United States District Court here this afternoon acquitted J. H. Stone of New York and Charles W. Russ and James Russ of Camden, officers of the Nonpareil Cork Works, who were tried on the charge of conspiracy on the ground that they put iron bars in cork blocks intended to be used for life preservers with the object of deceiving the Government Steamboat Inspectors.

The Government prosecuted the case hard from the start, but the bottom fell out of it last Friday when by public tests it was demonstrated before the jury that one of the life preservers sustained a buoyancy of twenty-seven pounds even with the iron bars in the cork blocks, while the Government demands a buoyancy of twenty-five pounds.

H. C. Quintard, one of the defendants, was acquitted by order of Judge Lanning, who found that there was no evidence against him.

MARYLAND'S SPEED TEST.

New Cruiser Maintains Eighteen Knots an Hour on Trial Trip.

NEWPORT, May 29.—The new cruiser Maryland, which is having her engines and machinery inspected by a naval board, arrived in the harbor this afternoon and after a brief stay went outside.

In a four hours' run between Gardner's Bay and Point Judith the cruiser maintained a speed of 18 knots an hour. Six boilers were in use and 1.8 pounds of coal per horse power were consumed.

HITS GERMAN COAL TRUST.

Law Passed Restricting the Shutting Down of Mines.

BERLIN, May 29.—The Prussian Diet to-day passed a law forbidding owners to shut down coal mines unless in cases where it can be proved that the mines have been operated at a loss.

The law is the outgrowth of conditions which arose about a year ago, when the coal syndicate was reorganized with fixed allotments for each mine instead of the old system assigning increased allotments for each new shaft sunk. After the reorganization the strongest companies bought a number of the smaller mines where the costs of operation were relatively high, shut them down, and mined their allotments at their own pits. This caused a considerable loss of employment in some districts, compelling the miners to migrate to districts where the most powerful companies were situated.

The law passed to-day empowers the Government Boards of Mining Inspectors to order resumption of work at any mine which has been idle for six months, provided it can be shown that the mine can be operated profitably. If the owners refuse the boards can institute compulsory process. The owners have the right to abandon their property to the State if they are unwilling to continue operations, or the State can, as a last resort dispossess the recalcitrant owners.

LENT MONEY TO MRS. POTTER?

Alleged Confession of English Lawyer Accused of Stealing $60,000.

LONDON, May 29.—Counsel for the plaintiff in the case of Alfred Fossick, a lawyer of Maidenhead, Berkshire, charged with misappropriating $60,000 in trust funds, put in a statement in court here to-day alleging that Fossick told him he lent the money to Mrs. James Brown Potter, the actress, without security.

The defendant was remanded.

Mrs. Potter's most recent appearance on the stage was in London in Jean Richepin's "Du Barry." The play was a failure, and recent cable advices have been to the effect that the actress was left practically without means.

Trials Not Held by McAdoo Void?

In serving writs of certiorari on Police Commissioner McAdoo yesterday in behalf of ex-Policemen Delmar S. Gardiner, Thomas Leonard, Joseph O'Brien, and Thomas J. Wade, Grant & Rouss, counsel for the men, raise a new point. All four were tried by Deputy Commissioner Lindsley and dismissed by Mr. McAdoo. The writs call on the Commissioner to answer whether he was in the city at the time of the trials, and why he did not try the men himself. The contention is raised that when the Commissioner is in the city he must himself try all cases, and that dismissals recommended by Deputies are not binding.

ERROR MAY BE FATAL TO ELECTRIC LIGHT BILL

Too Late to Rectify Measure Fixing Price for City's Use.

VIEW OF GOV. HIGGINS

Believes Mistake Was Made In Engrossing and Was Not Intentional —Hearing on Niagara Bridge Plan.

ALBANY, May 29.—An error has been discovered in the bill fixing the price that New York City shall pay for electricity furnished for municipal purposes which may kill that measure.

The error was brought to the attention of Gov. Higgins to-day by Attorney Charles Mathiewson, who appeared before him in opposition to this bill and the one fixing the price of electricity for private consumption in that city. The copy of the bill sent to Mayor McClellan and approved by him does not contain an amendment made to the measure just before it was placed on its final passage.

The Governor, after the hearing, said that the error in the bill probably was fatal to it. He feared that it was too late to secure a rectification of the matter by sending a corrected copy of the bill to Mayor McClellan for further action. It is his opinion that the error was probably made in the engrossing of the bill. He does not believe that it was intentional. It is also his opinion that if he signs the State Gas and Electric Commission bill that body will have power sufficient to reduce the price of electricity.

Attorney Mathiewson, for the New York and Queens County Electric Light Company, contended that had his company been compelled to operate under the prices fixed by the two bills, the business of last year would have shown a deficit of $30,000.

The Governor said he believed the companies could sell the electricity with profit to persons who consumed it all the year.

Others appearing in opposition were M. L. Ryan, the Richmond County Lighting and Railroad Company, E. H. Conquest of the Bronx Gas and Electric Company, and Edward Lauterbach.

The Governor also gave a hearing on the bill of Mr. Patten, providing that the people of Erie County shall vote on a proposition to expend $1,000,000 in constructing a bridge across the Niagara River from Grand Island to the mainland. Corporation Counsel C. F. Feldman and Alderman J. G. Taffee of Buffalo appeared in opposition and W. S. Hauff and Supervisor J. V. Bedell, representing the people of Grand Island, in favor of it.

HIGGINS SIGNS EIGHT BILLS.

One Enables City to Compromise Claims with Street Railroads.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 29.—Gov. Higgins made the statement to-day that he would probably dispose of the Gas, Water, and Railroad Commission bills. To-day he signed eight, which leaves about 100 yet to be disposed of.

Two of those approved to-day amend the railroad law. One, Senator Page's, authorizes the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of any city to enter into contract in behalf of the city with any corporation owning or operating a street railroad for the purpose of adjusting any differences between such corporation and the city with respect to car license fees, percentages on gross earnings, rentals, and any other payments other than taxes on property and capital stock, payable or claimed to be payable to the city under acts of the Legislature or municipal ordinance.

The purpose of this bill is to enable New York City to compromise its claims with the street railways in order to avert the endless litigation and delay in the operation of the franchise tax that otherwise would be inevitable.

The other railroad law amendment is Mr. Pendry's affecting Kings County. The railroad law says that a street railroad shall not be built or extended unless the consent of the owners of one-half the property shall be obtained. Mr. Pendry's amendment declares that such consents of property owners in Kings County hereafter executed shall be forfeited, unless within sixty days after the execution the record of it be filed in the office of the Register of the county.

Assemblyman J. T. Smith's bill, providing for the sale of the bank stock of any stockholder who fails to pay his portion of the assessment made in case it is found that the capital of a bank has been impaired, was among those signed.

Another of the new acts is Senator Gardner's, giving the Superintendent of Buildings in New York the power to punish any employe of the Building Department for neglect of duty or disobedience.

There is a bill also by Senator Armstrong which provides that any child under sixteen years of age who is guilty of a crime deemed a felony if committed by any person above that age shall be guilty only of a misdemeanor, except in cases of capital offenses or those in which the punishment is life imprisonment. Hereafter parents or guardians who by neglect, or in any other manner, contribute to the commission of any crime by a child will be deemed guilty of that crime.

The Governor has vetoed a bill of Senator Fitzgerald increasing the salary of the Under Sheriff of New York County from $5,000 to $6,000 per year, and that of twelve assistant Deputy Sheriffs from $1,000 to $1,500.

KILLED IN SWORD DUEL.

Hungarian Nobleman Fought with Fellow-Deputy.

BUDAPEST, Hungary, May 29.—Count Stefan Keglevich was killed to-day by Karl Hencs of the People's party in a duel fought with swords.

The meeting was the outcome of a heated dispute in the Chamber of Deputies. Keglevich, who was wounded in the region of the hart, died almost immediately.

JAIL FOR PLANNING SUICIDE.

Milligan, Who Watched Girl Take Poison, Gets Ten Years.

MILWAUKEE, May 29.—Arthur S. Milligan of Brooklyn, who came here from Chicago Jan. 16 with Florence Groves, with whom he entered into a suicide pact, pleaded guilty to manslaughter to-day and was sentenced to ten years in prison, the extreme penalty.

In accordance with a suicide pact, the girl made four attempts to end her life by drinking poisons on Jan. 22 and Jan. 23. After her death Milligan, who had bought the poison, "lost his nerve," fled from Milwaukee, and was later arrested at Racine. Milligan told the police that the girl took four different kinds of poison, while he looked on.

MEXICO'S PRESIDENT ANGERED BY DOWIE

Railway Surveys in the Republic Carried Too Far.

EXCEED THE CONCESSION

Dowie's Plan Calls for Building of Seven Cities and Big Irrigation Scheme.

Special to The New York Times.

GALVESTON, Texas, May 29.—John Alexander Dowie, "Elijah III.," has imperiled his standing with the Mexican Government after having received a two-million-acre concession in the State of Tamaulipas, on the Gulf Coast. Dowie, who appears to have captivated President Diaz and his associates with his colonization scheme—was authorized to build rail lines within his immense concession, but the discovery that surveys have been extended for nearly 100 miles beyond the Dowie grant aroused the suspicion of the authorities that Dowie was working with an American railroad syndicate. The railroad concession has been withdrawn, and Dowie is threatened with charges for breach of contract.

Dowie's plan calls for the building of seven cities, with Eden the chief of the group; the irrigation of vast barren tracts by tunneling into four extinct volcanoes that are filled with water, and other extraordinary improvements. With him is associated his son, J. Gladstone Dowie, and the two seem to be equipped with unlimited funds. They have submitted a code of laws by which they propose governing the Dowie "paradise," and a prominent legal firm of American attorneys in Mexico City has been retained to represent Dowie. He promises a settlement of 10,000 followers within five years.

NORWEGIANS TALK OF WAR.

Crown Prince May Seek Aid of Powers for Sweden.

LONDON, May 30.—The Copenhagen correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says that the Norwegians are very angry because the King refused to go to Christiania.

Rumors of war, the correspondent says, continue to be circulated, and it is stated that Swedish troops will be held in readiness.

It is also rumored that the Crown Prince, in attending the royal wedding at Berlin and during his visit to Windsor Castle, will try to secure the intervention of eGrmany and England in favor of Sweden.

CHRISTIANIA, Norway, May 29.—The Premier has received a telegram, dated at Stockholm to-day, from King Oscar, in which his Majesty says:

"With reference to the utterances of the Norwegian Government both in writing on the occasion of the resignation of the Ministry and by word of mouth in the Council of State on May 27, after I had refused to sanction the Consular law, I most decidedly repudiate the remarks made there against me and my mode of action. I hold to all I did in the Council of State about my constitutional rights, and I request the Premier to make this public as soon as possible."

In the Storthing to-day President Berner announced that as soon as the Norwegian members of the Council of State returned from Stockholm the Government would communicate to the Storthing a statement of the occurrences at Stockholm on Saturday, when King Oscar declined to sign the measure creating a separate Consular system for Norway. Their return is expected Tuesday.

M. Berner proposed to discontinue all negotiations for the present, and to this the Storthing unanimously agreed.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 29.—According to a private cablegram received here by a member of the University of Norway Students' Chorus, now touring this country, Norway has already separated from Sweden and the reigning house of Bernadotte. The dispatch, though not entirely clear, conveys the information that the Ministry, of which P. C. Michelsen is the head, has constituted itself a Provisional Government.

Claus Winter Hjelm, who received the dispatch, could make nothing else from the wording, but has cabled for more definite information. Mr. Hjelm is a Supreme Court lawyer.

HENDRICKS KIDNAPPING.

Brother of Laura Biggar's Friend Arrested—Charge Child Stealing.

James Hendricks of 524 Garden Street, Hoboken, a brother of Dr. Charles G. Hendricks, who, with Laura Biggar, the actress, was a defendant in the famous Bennett conspiracy case three years ago, was arrested by the police of the Hamilton Street Station, charged with attempting to abduct the three-year-old daughter of Mrs. Hendricks.

Mrs. Hendricks lives at 109 President Street, Brooklyn. She is suing her husband for divorce, and the case is to be heard in Brooklyn next month. She and Dr. Hendricks have three children. About a year ago Thomas, the eldest child, was kidnapped. His mother discovered him in Boston, and the courts restored him to her.

Recently Mrs. Hendricks heard that a strange man had been seen lurking about her home. This made her watchful. Last evening her three-year-old daughter Mary was playing in the street in front of her home. From time to time Mrs. Hendricks looked out of her window to see whether the little girl was still there. Just after 8 o'clock she saw a man take Mary by the hand and lead her away. Mrs. Hendricks screamed.

It happened that her brother, Patrick J. Nallin, who is a policeman and lives with his sister, was just coming home. He caught a glimpse of the man who was leading his little niece away, and soon overtook him. The man showed fight, and Nallin had a hard struggle until several of the neighbors came to his assistance. As soon as he could get a fair look at the man he was tussling with he shouted:

"I know you. You're Hendrick's brother!"

Nallin took the man to the Hamilton Street Station. There he admitted that he was a brother of Dr. Hendricks. He was locked up and the child was taken home.

Mrs. Hendricks said she did not know precisely where her husband was, but she believed he was in Philadelphia with Laura Biggar.

PUT THE VICOMTE IN A CELL.

He Expected Only a Fine for Auto Speeding and Had No Bondsman.

A French Vicomte spent an hour in the Harlem Police Court jail yesterday because his friends were slow in getting the $750 bail after he was held for automobile speeding. He was at last bailed out by Andre Bustanoby, one of the proprietors of the Café des Beaux Arts, who gave $75,000 worth of restaurant furnishings as security.

When the Vicomte was arrested Sunday night in the Boulevard Lafayette by Bicycle Policeman Donnelly he was recorded as Robert de Barras, and it was not until yesterday that the police learned he was the Vicomte Robert de Barres du Malard. He is interested in a French automobile company, and has been in this country three months. He lives at 25 West Twenty-fourth Street. Donnelly says that the Vicomte's machine, in which were another man and two women, was going twenty-five miles an hour.

He had not expected to be held for trial, believing he would be fined, as in Paris, and had no bondsman ready. He was sent back to a cell to wait until Mr. Bustanoby was summoned by telegraph.

DOUBT OF TARBELL'S TENURE.

Hyde's Advisers Against Compromise in the Equitable Now.

With the meeting of the Directors of the Equitable Life Assurance Society scheduled for to-morrow, the interest in the controversy within the organization is centred in the report which the Frick committee will make at that time on the charges of mismanagement made by the Hyde and Alexander factions against each other. It is probable that the report will be made public after to-morrow's meeting, but there is a possibility that it may be withheld for a day or two, if the Directors should not finish their own consideration of it at one session.

In view of the reports of a pending settlement, which have grown stronger as the time approached for the Frick committee to make known its conclusions, under the encouragement of the so-called peace party within the Directorate, it was said authoritatively last night that Mr. Hyde's advisers, strengthened in their contentions by the decision of Judge Maddox in the Lord suit, are considering no compromise measures at all, and have not considered them seriously at any time since the Directors last met. This was taken by some as indicating that Gage E. Tarbell's tenure as Second Vice President was in peril, for it is known that the Alexander party is not supporting Mr. Tarbell as strongly as it formerly was.

There was a report downtown yesterday that the agency force, which up to the time of the agents' convention some weeks ago, was thoroughly loyal to Tarbell and James W. Alexander, was swinging away from its former affiliations and toward Mr. Hyde as the interest in the company most likely to be in control when all the fighting was over. There was no agent found in a canvas of some of the downtown offices who would stand for quotation by nameon the subject. One who did not want his name used, said:

"We were assured at the convention in April that all the charges against Mr. Hydewere true. We did not stop to investigate, and therefore our action then seems now inexcusably unwise. For a month past the field men have been writing to Mr. Hyde seeking to ally themselves with his side."

DOG SAVES LIFE SAVER.

Supported Hultgrand in Water Until Companions Reached Him.

Ernest Hultgrand, an electrician, who was at work on the Third Avenue Bridge over the Harlem River, is a member of the Volunteer Life-Saving Corps and has to his credit the saving of several lives. But yesterday when he fell into the Harlem River he might have drowned had not a brindle bulldog gone to his rescue.

Hultgrand and two companions were repairing wires under the bridge yesterday afternoon. The electrician, with a coil of copper wire around his neck and his belt full of heavy tools, was crawling along a narrow footway, when he slipped and fell into the river. Hultgrand says his first thought when he struck the water was:

"Am I to drown or lose this valuable coil of copper wire and all these fine tools?"

He decided not to drown and shot up to the surface. But he was so exhausted that he would have gone down again had not something firmly gripped his belt.

When the electrician recovered his breath he found himself supported by the men who had been working with him on the bridge, Andrew Cohen and Matthew J. Hines, who had jumped to his rescue. But a big brindle bulldog had its teeth in his belt.

Hultgrand declared last night that the dog was his rescuer, and Cohen and Hines said that he would have gone down before they could reach him had not the bulldog seized his belt. The dog is owned by Michael Morris, who runs a hotel at One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street and Third Avenue.

CYCLIST SHOT FOR BURGLAR.

He Passed While Tracys Were Hunting a Nocturnal Visitor.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, May 29.—Robert M. Tracy, who lives on the Livingston Avenue Road, and whose house recently was robbed, heard a noise last night at one of the windows. He went out to investigate, but saw nobody. Half an hour later he heard the noise again. He rushed out with his sons, George and Robert, Jr., and they saw a man dart from the house toward some bushes. Tracy took his shotgun, his sons armed themselves, and they went burglar hunting.

Just at that time Marvin Dalrymple, who had been down the road calling upon a young woman, came along on his bicycle. Tracy called to the wheelman to halt. Dalrymple thought he was being held up. He threatened to shoot any one who molested him and rode on. Two loads of buckshot were sent after him.

Forty-five of the shot entered Dalrymple's leg and his wheel was wrecked. The young man managed to reach home, and told his mother that he had been attacked by robbers and shot. He is in a precarious condition.

D. W. ROSS A CANAL OFFICIAL.

Illinois Central Man to be Government Purchasing Agent.

CHICAGO, May 29.—David W. Ross, General Superintendent of Transportation of the Illinois Central Railroad, has been made Purchasing Director for the Panama Canal. The place is one of great responsibility in view of the millions of dollars' worth of supplies to be bought for the canal, and the possible tariff troubles which have been discussed by the President and the Secretary of War. Mr. Ross will move at once to Washington.

Mr. Ross's rise in railroading was exceptionally rapid. Within a few years he became assistant to the Second Vice President of the Illinois Central. He also acted as Purchasing Agent for the road.

FIGHTING BURGLAR CAUGHT.

Had Tools, Watches, and Diamonds—Long Chase to Get Him.

Frederick Armstrong was locked up last night in the West Twentieth Street Police Station on a charge of burglary after a chase in which he tried to get away from several policemen. Two gold watches, a silver watch, a gun-metal watch, three diamond rings, and burglar's tools were found in his possession.

Early in the evening Mrs. Annie Thermann, who has a furnished room house at 325 Eighth Avenue, while going up stairs met Armstrong. He pushed her aside and ran to the street. She followed, crying "thief." At Twenty-sixth Street Policeman Young of the West Twentieth Street Station tried to stop him, but was knocked down. Capt. Day and Detective Glennon took up the chase and caught him. The fugitive knocked both men down, but was finally overpowered by the use of a club.

The police say Armstrong admitted numerous burglaries in Western cities.

SHE WANTS $100,000.

N. Y. Central Goes to Court to Get Property It Values at Only $18,000.

To determine the value of the property at 116 East Forty-fifth Street, owned by Helen Lehon, condemnation proceedings have been started in the Supreme Court by the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad. The company wants the property as a part of its new terminal site.

The owner declares the property is worth $100,000 and won't take less. A fair value, according to the railroad, is $18,000.

WESTERN COLT FIRST FOR THE MANHANSET

George C. Bennett Carried Fred Cook's Colors to Victory.

ONE FAVORITE SUCCESSFUL

Marjoram Beat Hamburg Belle in Opening Race on a Heavy Track at Gravesend.

Western horses and horsemen had a prominent part in the racing at the Gravesend track yesterday, as in fact they have had at each day of the meeting, though it was not until yesterday, when the unbeaten colt George C. Bennett went after the Manhanset Stakes, that any of the new-comers won a really important victory. With the race of George C. Bennett, the colors of Fred Cook, the owner of about the largest and best stable that will represent the West on the New York tracks this season, were introduced to metropolitan racegoers.

The Western colt was sent to the post favorite over the well-tried winner Voorhees, for the Manhanset, the fourth race on the programme, a five and a half furlongs sprint, in which Bennett carried the top weight of the nine that ran. The race was run on a course sticky and slow from the effects of the Sunday downpour, but the going did not in the least weaken the confidence of the Cook stable. Voorhees broke first, with Osiris second, and Waterbok third, while George C. Bennett was back in the crowd, but in the first half furlong Bennett picked his way through to third place, behind Voorhees, who made the pace, attended by Waterbok, the positions being about the same to the turn into the stretch. There O'Neil on Voorhees tried a bit of sharp practice, and swung wide, carrying out Waterbok, as he made for the better going out in the middle of the track. Bennett, however, hung to his place on the rail, and, saving a lot of ground on the turn, got up to Voorhees, and in a whipping finish drew to the front, winning eased up in the last few strides, by three parts of a length, while Voorhees beat Waterbok five lengths for the place. The race, in addition to introducing the star Western colt, furnished the newcomer among the jockeys, Nicol, with his first winning mount in the East.

One other Western horse that was a factor in the day's racing was Ananias, from the stable of John F. Schorr, though Ananias could do no better than finish second to the favorite St. Valentine. Summary:

Irish Lad Training On.

The prospects are excellent that Irish Lad, winner of the Brooklyn Handicap two years ago, and the hero of many hard-fought races in the big handicaps last year, when he won the Metropolitan, will train on and be ready to race about the time the Suburban Handicap is run. The horse so far has done all that has been asked of him, and yesterday when called on for his first really fast move in sharp training, worked a mile very easily in 1:49 at the Sheepshead Bay track.

Whitney Estate to Sell Yearlings.

The executors of the estate of William C. Whitney have fixed on June 10 as the date when the final offering of horses owned jointly by the heirs will be sold, and on that day, at the Gravesend track, the last of the horses owned in the name of the estate will be offered at auction.

MURPHY TO LEAVE YALE.

Famous Trainer Going to Pennsylvania —Sweeney to Succeed Him.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 29.—A very flattering offer has been made to Trainer Michael Murphy of Yale by the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Murphy has informed the Yale athletic managers that he will give them notice before formally making known his decision. His five-year contract with Yale expired with the intercollegiate games last Saturday.

It is stated by close friends of Mr. Murphy that he has made up his mind to accept Pennsylvania's offer, which is said to be a salary of $5,000 a year and a life interest in a new house in Philadelphia.

For the past three years the Red and Blue authorities have held out alluring inducements to Murphy, to all of which he hitherto has been proof. It is given as a reason for his probable departure from Yale that his health is far from good. He has been suffering from a mild attack of tuberculosis, and has frequently complained of the climate in the neighborhood of New Haven.

Julian W. Curtis, who in the absence of Walter Camp in Europe is the head of the Yale Athletic Advisory Board, said last night:

"The report that Mr. Murphy would leave Yale came as a great surprise to me. The first I learned of it was in Philadelphia last Saturday. I hunted up Murphy to learn of its truth, but was unable to locate him. Less than a month ago I saw Murphy at Yale, but he did not intimate then that he contemplated leaving New Haven for Philadelphia. I know that he has not enjoyed the best health for several years, and if he has made arrangements to go to Pennsylvania it is solely on account of health, as he has repeatedly expressed himself as satisfied with the salary he received at Yale. His loss will be a severe one, as his moral influence was almost as great as his training abilities. It is useless to discuss a probable successor until he has handed in his resignation. If he leaves the Advisory Board will in all probability consult him before selecting another trainer. He thinks very highly of Michael F. Sweeney, the old champion high jumper, who at present is trainer at Hill School, Pottstown, Penn."

It is reported that Murphy will take with him to Philadelphia Jim Hogan, Yale's football Captain of last year, who will act as football coach. It is also definitely stated that M. F. Sweeney will succeed him. Sweeney has been at Yale as Murphy's football assistant during the last two years.

Murphy first went to Yale in 1896 as athletic coach. Four years later he went to the Detroit Athletic Club. He stayed there two years and then returned to Yale, where he remained until 1903. From 1896 to 1900 he was director of athletics at Pennsylvania, and then left that institution and returned to Yale.

Prominent Clubmen in Pool Tourney.

With an entry list of 120 amateur competitors play will begin to-morrow night in the Metropolitan pool handicap tournament, at the Strollers' Club, 67 Madison Avenue.

Many of the scratch players, those who play a string of 125 balls, are holders of various club and sectional championships. Among these are Dr. Walter G. Douglas, ex-champion of New York Athletic Club; W. A. Tilt, present champion New York Athletic Club; George C. Smith, Union League Club; William, Downs, Metropolitan Club; Charles E. Greenough, Yale Club; J. Bullard Blair, Amateur Billiard Club of New York, and De Witt Clinton Flanagan, Racquet and Tennis Club. Among those who will act as stewards of the tournament are Col. John Jacob Astor, Guy Phelps Dodge, Albert Gallatin, Frederick C. Havemeyer, Lawrence Knickerbocker, Lawrence Waterbury, Eugene Van Schaick, and Sherman Flint.

The tournament will be played on the missed-and-out system, and the first prize will be a valuable silver punch bowl.

WESTCHESTER WINS MEADOW BROOK POLO

Whitney and Waterbury Arouse Enthusiasm by Fast Plays.

RAPID SCORING OF GOALS

Beeckman Makes Only Point for the Home Club—Team Work of Victors Well-Nigh Perfect.

Harry Payne Whitney and James M. Waterbury, Jr., contributed materially to the overwhelming victory of the Westchester Country Club's polo team yesterday at the Meadow Brook Club near Westbury, L. I., in the second game for the Meadow Brook cups. It was the first appearance this season of these veterans of the sport, and the little grand stand overlooking the field was crowded with interested spectators. Westchester won by 18 goals to 10¾ scored by the Meadow Brook quartet.

Powerful hitting, faster riding, and admirable team work, in all of which Westchester excelled, were the contributory causes of victory. There was also plenty of individual brilliancy in playing. Whitney and Waterbury were fully up to the expectations of their friends, and the ease with which they controlled the ball, making long runs down the field and hitting with free, powerful strokes, frequently aroused the crowd on the side lines to wild enthusiasm. Polo as played in the golden age of the sport at Meadow Brook seemed to be temporarily revived, and the old timers found keen delight in the game. Line-up:

American Women Lose in Golf.

LONDON, May 29.—The American entrants in the women's golf championship failed to secure a prize in the medal play competition on the Cromer links to-day. Miss Harriet Curtis of Boston, Mass., recorded the best score for the Americans, making the eighteen holes in 89 strokes. Miss Lottie Dod, the English champion, failed to return her card, and Miss Dorothy Campbell of North Berwick, won with a score of 82. The championship play will begin to-morrow.

You might think, to hear clothing men talk, that our chief object in this discussion of the "mercerized cotton" cheat is to lessen the sale of such goods, in the hope of increasing the sale of ours.

You couldn't be more mistaken. Our object is to help educate the buying public to know what they buy, and what it's worth. The question of increasing or dimishing of sales, both for us and for the "mercerized cotton" party, will take care of itself.

There are many thousands of men in this country who expect to buy a good suit for $7.50 to $10; they think $12 extravagant, and $15 highway robbery. These men must be clothed; they can't go naked; and some of them, we fear, can't be educated.

They are the legitimate constituency of the "mercerized cotton" dealers. But we don't like to see them paying an all-wool price for clothes that don't deserve it; nor, on the other hand, thinking they can get into the all-wool class at a "mercerized" price.

We're fighting the sham and pretense, not the fact, in the "mercerized cotton" fraud. Our label is a protest as well as a protection against it; a small thing to look for, a big thing to find.

THE END OF THE WAR.

Nobody can fairly find fault with Admiral ROJESTVENSKY for anything he has done or left undone. The greatest sea fighter of any nation or of any age, even "BLAKE or mighty NELSON," could have done no better than he has done with the material he had and the situation which he has had to face. His country was beaten before he ever left Cronstadt. All that was available of Russia's sea power was in Chinese waters. The stars in their courses fought against SISERA. The equipment and dispatch of his squadron were a forlorn hope and must have been known by him to be. It was hard upon him to be expected to sacrifice his life and the lives of his subordinates and the remaining ships of his country on so desperate a chance. But that is one of the sacrifices which every country has a right to expect of those of its children "whose business 'tis to die." It was all very well for the Russian press, the French press, the German press, to count up his guns and to compute the thickness of his armor and to show thereby his paper superiority over his opponent. These computations, which amused their makers, can only have saddened him. He knew that sooner or later it must come to a "show-down." He cannot have doubted what the results of the show-down would be, for he remembered the fate of his predecessors. As he was steaming north he must have re-experienced the emotions of SAPPHIRA in the Bible when the apostle said to her: "Behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door and shall carry thee out."

We should not even find fault with the high-handed violations of French neutrality which he committed at the expense of Russia's ally, either off the coast of Madagascar or off the coast of Indo-China. That he made French coasts a base of operations against Japan there can be no fair disputing. If he had been successful, Japan would have had a real and most serious grievance against France, and she would have been in a position to exact reprisals to the total destruction of the French colonial possessions in Asia. It is France which has, most of all neutral nations, reason to rejoice that the event has been such as to leave no causes of lasting resentment against her for acts which France not only was especially disabled by her alliance from effectively resisting, but which she had no force on the spot to resist. But neither is it fair to blame the Russian Admiral for these things. He was a man in a desperate situation which required him to seize every chance in his own favor, however desperate. He did what he could for his country, and what every country would have a right to expect and require from a naval commander in such a situation. He did what he could. He went out to die for his country like a sailor and a gentleman. It is not his fault that he is not dead, if indeed he be still alive.

It is not to detract from the merit of the Russian commander to pay tribute to the Japanese commander, although, to be sure, he has presumably been acting all along not on his own discretion, but upon the orders of the Japanese Admiralty, with which he has been continually in touch. The course which he has taken or which has been prescribed for him nevertheless required much self-restraint, as did the course of the Japanese Admiralty last year, when SKRYDLOFF was ravaging the Japanese coasts, and when it refused to divert from the containing force in front of Port Arthur any part of its naval force, such a diversion being pretty plainly the main object of the Russian raids. It must have been a great temptation to the Japanese authorities to prevent the junction of ROJESTVENSKY and NEBOGATOFF, to effect which the former Admiral so notoriously abused the hospitality of Kamranh Bay. But if the Japanese fleet had sailed south for that purpose, it would have run the risk of having one or the other of the squadrons seeking a junction eluding it, and steaming up the undefended Korean Strait. The Japanese refused to take that risk, assuming the lesser risk of the junction, in the confident expectation that, by awaiting the combined squadrons at the point which they would have to pass on the straight road to their destination, Japan would be able to abolish the remnant of Russia's sea power at a blow. The event has justified this confidence. The fighting force of the combined Russian squadron was, in reality, the four big, fast, and powerful new battleships of ROJESTVENSKY. To destroy these was to end the pretension of Russia to carry on a naval conflict in Far Eastern waters. Our news now is that two of them have been sunk and another one captured. Russia's sea power is no longer merely in abeyance. For the purposes of this war it is abolished. Not until she has created a new navy can she make a show of resisting Japan's sea power in those seas.

That should mean the end of the war. For it is to be noted that in her desperate and futile attempt to regain the control of the western coast of the North Pacific, Russia has stripped herself to a complete naval defenselessness on the Baltic and in all European waters. The inexpugnable Count CASSINI may still insist that Russia shall keep on fighting until the restoration of "Russian prestige," an event that evidently cannot happen within the lifetime of Count CASSINI, and apparently not within the lifetime of any Russian now living. But there must be some persons of sense in St. Petersburg, and some of these must have the ear of the Czar. Why should Russia delay peace and go on with useless and exasperating slaughter, sending more and more men out over the single track of the Trans-Siberian, increasingly vulnerable as it stretches from Harbin to Vladivostok, until Russia undergoes the capture of this latter stronghold, and with it additional justification on the part of Japan for the requirement of the retention of that stronghold, or for an increased pecuniary demand for the restoration of it? Vladivostok, it is to be borne in mind, is by no means traditionally Russian. It came into Russia's possession by a diplomatic trick less than half a century ago, when a clever Russian diplomatist falsely persuaded China that Russia had had something to do with the withdrawal of the French and British forces which had occupied Peking, and received the cession of the harbor in return for services that had never been rendered.

The Japanese would be to blame if, in arranging terms of peace, they should contravene the legitimate national aspirations of Russia, and thus leave a rankling grievance. But they would not do this if they confined themselves to the terms of peace beyond which no responsible Japanese authority has ever gone, the restoration of Manchuria to China, the de-Russianization of the Eastern Chinese Railroad, the acknowledgment of Japan's protectorate over Korea, the dismantling of Vladivostok as a fortress, allowing it to remain in full force and effect as a port. The demand of a pecuniary indemnity, even, Japan might well be content to forego in return for the wiping out of Russian investments in Port Arthur and Dalny and the "hinterland" of Manchuria. Upon these demands Japan has proved her right to insist. If she does not go beyond them, Russia's friends among the nations may well, and in Russia's own interests, advise and even urge Russia to consent to them and to make peace upon the basis of the accomplished, incontrovertible, and irreversible facts of the situation.

DODGED.

President ROOSEVELT has been painfully disappointed in Ohio. That great bulwark of Republicanism has failed him. The Republican platform adopted at Columbus does not contain a word about the rate issue, which he has pushed to the front and is advocating with all the determination of his nature. Here is the declaration relating to Trusts and monopolies:

> President ROOSEVELT's comprehensive enforcement of the Republican laws against monopolies, combines, and trusts in restraint of trade—laws whose validity the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained—has our hearty encouragement and support. We also indorse every effort for the active enforcement of existing laws to stop all unjust discriminations and special favors in the form of railway rebates, or by any other device, and we favor such further legislation on that subject with adequate penalties as may, after full investigation, seem to the Republican Congress and Administration wise and conservative, yet adequate to prevent any unfair advantage to any and to promote and insure the rights of all individuals, interests, and localities.

There is not a word, not a whisper, about the fixing of rates by a Federal commission. There is not only no allusion to that question but there is a studied avoidance of it. The Ohio Republicans are with the President in his attempts to put a stop to unjust discriminations and railway rebates. But all that he has made secondary and subordinate whenever he has talked to the American people about railroad abuses. He has invariably given the place of greatest prominence to his demand for an amendment conferring the power to fix rates upon the Inter-State Commerce Commission. Upon that the Ohio platform is silent as the grave.

Gov. HERRICK also in his speech accepting a renomination steered clear of the subject of rates. A phrase or two about the observance of the law by transportation corporations, a word of praise of the President for his "splendid fight" for various good things, and he was done with Administration topics.

The belief irresistibly forced upon the candid observer is that the Ohio Republicans dodged the President's great issue of railroad ratemaking. Did the delegates to the Columbus Convention betray the people? Was the loud and insistent popular demand for Federal ratemaking stifled in the convention? Or is it true, as persons in the best position for knowing the truth have now long insisted, that outside of Administration circles there is no visible excitement over the subject of unreasonable rates on railways, and that the suppression of discriminations and rebates as demanded in the Ohio platform would remove substantially all just causes for complaint against the railroad corporations?

THE ATLANTIC'S VICTORY.

Persons interested in yacht racing have been much puzzled and grieved for a week by the reports of the progress of the contestants in the ocean yacht race, as given by the casual liners who encountered them, or thought they did. At the start the Atlantic went off at a rate which quite justified those who had picked her for a winner out of the crowd as heterogeneous as the combined squadrons of ROJESTVENSKY and NEBOGATOFF, composed of schooners, yawls, brigs, barkentines, and ships, varying in tonnage from less than one hundred to more than seven, which essayed to cross the ocean on even terms. The Atlantic has more than justified the most sanguine expectations by her arrival at the Lizard two days before it was looked for, having in the meantime made the astonishing day's run of 341 knots, which not so very long ago was highly respectable for a steamer. But in the meantime she has been reported from various situations in the most irreconcilable and bewildering ways, and sometimes so as to denote that she was making rather fast progress crablike and backward.

It seems desirable that if another such race is arranged, a full description of the competing yachts, in which the seafaring man cannot err, should be furnished in advance to the skippers of the ocean liners, both incoming and outgoing. Meanwhile it would be interesting to know for what craft the Atlantic was mistaken by those skippers who saw her at various stages of the race grandly bringing up the rear. Probably for the three-master Sally Ann, from Provincetown April 28 for Bordeaux, with salt mackerel and lumber.

COAL SMOKE.

Yesterday came very near to being a perfect day. The air was clear, the humidity low, the temperature moderate. From an elevation one could see great distances in every direction, and such observation gave opportunity for noting very distinctly the number of instances in which the provisions of the Sanitary Code forbidding the generation of smoke are openly and persistently violated. It was not difficult to distinguish at least fifty stacks from which black smoke poured intermittently or constantly, in rolling cumuli. Doubtless more could have been detected had the smoke of those nearer at hand not obstructed the view by interposing a haze through which it was impossible to distinguish clearly.

Why is not the code provision referred to enforced systematically by the Health Department? There are no considerations, economic or hygienic, which restrain the Board of Health from putting a stop to the pollution of the atmosphere. It is not a question of the kind of coal a consumer shall burn, but of the manner in which he burns it. A citizen has the right to burn pitch if he chooses to do so, provided he can find a method of burning it without infringing the rights of his neighbors and the public at large. That soft coal may be burned without smoke has been demonstrated so often that it is no longer open to discussion. A great many consumers in New York are doing it. Those who do not know how should be required to learn; those who do not want to should be made to suffer the penalties for the maintenance of a public nuisance. The cry that the board is protecting the "anthracite monopoly" against the competition of bituminous coal may be disregarded. Now only is it doing nothing of the sort, but it could not if it wanted to. Any one may burn soft coal; no one may maintain an unnecessary and correctable public nuisance; soft coal may be burned without nuisance; anthracite is sometimes attended with nuisance in burning, and such nuisance is unlawful. This is the whole subject in few words.

BEAUTIFYING CENTRAL PARK.

Commissioner PALLAS is scarcely to be congratulated on the intelligence of his Tammany assistants. Of many instances which establish the truth of this generalization, one will suffice at the moment.

A few hundred feet north of the Eighty-first Street entrance to Central Park, on the west side, an attempt is making to develop a spring, or a semblance of one. If there is a spring at that point no sign of water is now visible, but that deficiency may be made good by tapping a Croton main. However, preparations are making for the impounding of a small quantity of water at that point in a little basin formed by the grouping of some very interesting rocks, not large but shapely and well disposed. The first step in the direction of improvement seems to have been to line the basin with sheet zinc. Why cement and gravel were not employed, if a lining is needed, we have no idea. The zinc looks extremely odd as the lining for a natural basin to catch and hold spring water. But the crowning achievement of this improver upon nature was in whitewashing the rocks, so that they look like so many "chunks" of gypsum imbedded into a mica schist formation. They glare, ghastly and horrible, like conventional tombstones in a cemetery.

What prompted the gentleman in charge of this work to whitewash these rocks passes comprehension. The average citizen who will take the trouble to wander about this section of the Park, if he espies this horror, will be prompted to the most injurious expressions concerning the author of it.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Signed and Unsigned Articles.

As all newspapers are constantly engaged in telling the rest of the world what they think of it, its doings, and its undones, they can well afford, once in a while, and just for the sake of variety, to present a picture of themselves, drawn by a person who, comparatively speaking, belongs to the inarticulate class. Hence are we moved to quote a few lines from a letter in which one of our readers discourses very kindly and courteously upon the proper conduct of newspapers and the superiority of those published in France to the variety indigenous here. His text is our recent statement that the signed article is one man's opinion, while that unsigned is or pretends to be something bigger and better. "So far," says the gentle critic, "as the unsigned article pretending to be something, that just describes it. It generally ends at pretending. Regarding the signed article being one man's opinion, it does not differ so much from the raft of unsigned stuff that floods the papers daily. The editorials are usually the work of the men that write them, and who, not signing them, assume no responsibility to the public; in fact, it is a question if most of the stuff ground out machinelike would be publicly acknowledged by the writers. There is certainly a great difference between the French newspapers, or journals, as they could more properly be called, and our commonplace newspapers. The man who writes over his own name is very apt to be more careful in his work than the one who throws off a column or two like a machine, and when it appears in the paper it is hard to tell whether it was written by the editor or the 'devil'—that is, if there is any sense in it at all. Usually it is quite easy to put it down as the simmerings of the editor's brain without any doubt at all." There is the picture. It doesn't to us seem to be a very valuable contribution to the controversy over onymous and anonymous journalism, but it serves a purpose by illustrating the qualifications of those who are most prompt and confident in criticising newspapers and in giving advice as to how they should be run. The assumption that the writer of the unsigned editorial article avoids responsibility will be particularly amusing to all engaged in the manufacture of those wares, for they know only too well the absurdity of such a notion.

Charges Us with Dropping "H's."

A correspondent who really has lighted upon a fact hitherto unnoted is the one who yesterday avenged what is evidently his weariness of the charge that many Englishmen drop their "h's" by making the counter-accusation that all Americans do it. What's more—and worse—he proved the accusation by presenting sentence after sentence which, coming from almost any one of us in the hurry of ordinary conversation, would certainly reach the ear of the listener without its due complement of aspirates. Printed out, "What did 'e say?" would strike us as cockney dialect, and so would "Did you see 'er?" and yet one can hear thousands of just such elisions from one end of New York to the other, all day and every day, and he who denies that he ever makes them can be credited with courage much more easily than with veracity. But there is a big difference between this and the thing for doing which we laugh at the lower class Britisher. Never by any chance do we take liberties with the "h" of a word on which we would place emphasis, while that is exactly what he does, and by so doing he produces results that differentiate himself not only from us but from better trained speakers among his own countrymen. Our habit of clipping or slurring unemphasized sounds is not, like his method of dealing with the "h's," a peculiar linguistic trick of ours, but a habit common to all the people of all countries. Englishmen who would not think of dropping their "h's" in the ordinary and recognized meaning of that expression, do drop them, as a matter of fact, when and as we do. As for our correspondent's statement that nine-tenths of Americans, educated or uneducated, fail to strengthen the "w" in words beginning with "wh," that, we are quite sure, is a large exaggeration. That fault is fairly common in several parts of the country, but not nine-tenths, or even one-tenth, even of uneducated Americans, are guilty of it, and there are great sections where it is never heard.

A Good Word for One Who Will Need It.

It will be very easy to treat with lofty scorn that Long Islander who has refused to allow the placing on his house of a tablet announcing that in it WALT WHITMAN was born. The scorning will not only be easy, but it will tend in the opinion of many to demonstrate mental superiority and literary appreciation, and therefore we are confident that a lot of people will indulge in it and that the Long Islander is likely to hear from all parts of the country that he is a dull and miserable fellow, little better than the brutes that perish. For various reasons, one of them, perhaps, just the wish to be contrary, we are impelled right now to declare that we, too, if compelled to live all the year round in a little house in Huntington, L. I., would feel it something of a nuisance to have said house proclaimed to all and sundry the birthplace even of a poet as good and gray as WALT WHITMAN. The entertainment of a constant string of pilgrims, personally conducted and other, would seriously interfere with the ordinary enterprises and occupations of country life. If they only stood out in the road and exclaimed, it would still be sufficiently embarrassing to the owner and his family. And the pilgrims would never be content with standing in the road. According to report the Long Islander puts his refusal on the ground that he doesn't want his house used for the advertising of any poet. His defense would have been less difficult if he had sought and found another explanation, but his conclusion has our sympathy, even if his premises are inadmissible. If the ladies in Huntington's Colonial Society want to make a show place of the little house, why don't they buy it and so relieve the case of all its complexities and embarrassments? That would be a highly commendable course, and, if it were pursued, nobody could sourly criticise their advertising of a poet—or even of themselves.

Avoids the Exertion.

From The Chicago Journal.

"Don't you ever take a nap in the day-time?"

"No. It's too much trouble getting up more than once a day."

THE JOY OF "TIPPING."

Hopkinson Smith's Genial Philosophy Heartily Approved.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Hopkinson Smith's characteristically genial argument for the joy of "tipping," which appeared in your columns on Sunday last, touches the right keynote. After all, what is it to live? It is to radiate all possible sweetness and light; it is to give of our best, in friendly attitude, in generous recognition to every human being with whom we come in contact. The material expression of this good-will of sympathetic recognition of the real brotherhood of all humanity may be large or small according to one's powers, but the spirit that prompts this recognition is even more, and it is felt (and appreciated) by the humblest Italian peasant as well as by one's friends and associates. More than this, the material resources of life are by no means fixed and absolute. They are like the manna rained from heaven. Hoard them up, live only from a selfish basis, and they wither and are stale. Pass them on—trust God for more—live in that beautiful, sympathetic, joyous spirit which fosters and develops creative energy and one's own power to create resources is infinitely multiplied.

The "Social Settlement" ideal is one that every human being may realize in his own experience without going to Mulberry Street in New York or to the North End in Boston. Let one live this ideal in an accidental and an incidental contact with one's laundress, chambermaid, porter, waiter; with each and all with whom in any relations he comes in contact. If every one in the world did this there would be little need of special organizations for philanthropy. As Mr. Hopkinson Smith so well says, there is untold joy in giving the little "tip" that makes happy its receiver. It is the seal and sign of one's recognition of his attention and courtesy. It is "a part of the play," so to speak, of travel. Buy a little less; cut off some of the (often superfluous) personal expenditures and experience the greater luxury of diffusing happiness.

Sweetness and light are the most profitable commodities in the world in which to deal. In the last analysis the only things we really possess—in the permanent sense—are the things we give. All else vanishes; these alone transmute themselves into love and joy and sweet thought and sympathetic recognition, and so become a part of our immortal life.

"Give as gives the one great Giver
Of the best thy soul hath found;
Hast thou done a noble action?
There is consecrated ground."

Let us radiate our best, both in thought and feeling as well as in whatever material expression of these it is possible and proper to make. The friendships of life are not limited to one's calling list. They may well include the humblest and the poorest, and is not all our Christian faith summed up in the simple ideal of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God? LILIAN WHITING.

New York, May 29, 1905.

Superuncontradistinguishabilitiveness.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. David H. Dodge sent you not long ago a poem on the above word, and used the word several times.

It is a good word and applies to many editors, not alone in the matter of verse and story, essay and historical novel, but in news from the Far East.

In to-day's TIMES and other dailies mention is made of a naval "smashing"—(awfully vulgar word!)—having reference to the Russian fleet, which is being annoyed while coaling by some Japanese fishermen.

To you and the rest of the American people, as represented by the gentlemen of the press who have been subsidized by the Japanese Government, I apply the most insulting number of letters I can crowd into a word.

Man alive! don't you know that the Russian fleet is coaling, only coaling? They are coaling, only coaling; they are coaling—that is all.

WALTER BEVERLEY CRANE.

Proposed St. Bernard Tunnel.

According to the Berne correspondent of The London Standard the great Simplon tunnel, although not yet open to traffic, is already spoken of as an old story, while another scheme is being pushed still further to shorten the journey between Central Europe and the north and west of Italy.

The new undertaking consists of a proposed line from Martigny, in the Rhone Valley, under the famous St. Bernard Pass direct to Turin, in an almost straight line. At present the distance from Lausanne to Turin by the Simplon route is about 225 miles, and by the Mont Cenis route a mile or so further. By the proposed St. Bernard tunnel route the distance will be reduced to about 140 miles, a saving of nearly 90 miles, or, in other words, more than a third of the present distance.

First Recorded Yacht Race.

From The London Chronicle.

Such a contest as that which has just begun at Sandy Hook would have seemed a wild dream of romance to King Charles II. when he took a leading part in the first recorded yacht race. "I sailed this morning," says Evelyn on Oct. 1, 1661, "with his Majesty in one of his yachts, (or pleasure boats,) vessels not known among us till the Dutch East India Company presented that curious piece to the King; being very excellent sailing vessels. It was on a wager between his other new pleasure boat, built frigatelike, and one of the Duke of York's; the wager £100; the race from Greenwich to Gravesend and back. The King lost it going, the wind being contrary, but saved stakes in returning. There were divers noble persons and lords on board, his Majesty sometimes steering himself." "Yacht," a word new to England in 1660, is Dutch from "jagten," to hunt, to speed, connected with our "go."

"A REFUGE IN DISTRESS."

A fellow's father knows a lot
Of office work and such,
But when it comes to things like what
A boy wants, he ain't much.
For when it comes to cuts or warts
Or stone bruise on your toes,
A fellow's father don't know, but
A fellow's mother knows.

A fellow's father, he looks wise
And says: "A-hem! A-hem!"
But when it comes to cakes and pies,
What does he know of them?
He knows the price of wheat and rye
And corn and oats, it's true,
But if you got the leg ache, why,
He don't know what to do.

And if you burned your back the time
That you went in to swim,
And want some stuff to heal it, why,
You never go to him,
Because he doesn't know a thing
About such things as those,
But you just bet, and don't forget,
A fellow's mother knows.

And if your nose is sunburned, till
It's all peeled off, and you
Go to him for some healin' stuff,
He don't know what to do.
He's just as helpless as can be,
But when a fellow goes
And asks his mother, why, you see,
A fellow's mother knows.

A fellow's father knows a lot,
But it ain't any use,
So if a fellow's really got
The leg ache or a bruise,
Or if there's anything he wants
He gets right up and goes
And asks his mother, for, you see,
A fellow's mother knows.

HOLLAND CO. MUST TELL.

Employe Suing for Fee Wants to Know About Boats Sold to Russia.

Francis P. B. Sands of Washington, formerly in the service of the Holland Torpedo Boat Company, got a favorable decision from Justice McCall in the Supreme Court yesterday in his suit for commissions on the sale of torpedo boats to the Russian Government. Justice McCall's decision authorizes the examination of Isaac L. Rice, President of the Holland Company, and Elihu B. Frost, Vice President of the Electric Boat Company. Mr. Rice is also President of this company. Mr. Sands wants to get information from them to use in his suit for commissions.

Mr. Sands says that as legal adviser of the Holland Company in Washington he took an active part in the negotiations with the Russian Government, and discussed the matter with Gen. D. T. Mertvago of the Russian Navy, who came to the United States to see about torpedo boats. He says that as a result of these negotiations the Russian Government ordered several boats. Mr. Sands does not know just how many contracts were made or the figures. He expects to get this information from President Rice. He puts in a claim for 10 per cent. on the contract price of the boats.

Mr. Sands obtained an order some time ago for the examination of Messrs. Rice and Frost, but the Appellate Division modified it.

When the matter came up before John Hone, Jr., the referee appointed to take the testimony of Messrs. Rice and Frost, De Lancey Nicoll, attorney for the torpedo boat companies, objected to the legality of the entire proceeding, and Mr. Frost refused to answer questions about the contracts. Justice McCall was called upon to pass on the objection raised by Mr. Nicoll.

In his decision yesterday Justice McCall says that the Appellate Division intended to prevent unwarranted prying into the affairs of the companies, but that its order cannot be construed so as to make farcical the examination of witnesses. Justice McCall holds that Mr. Sands has a right to a free and unrestricted inquiry.

PRESIDENT HERE TO-DAY.

Leaves Washington and Will Attend Unveiling of Slocum Statue.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—President Roosevelt left Washington at 12:30 this morning for Brooklyn, where he will participate in the Memorial Day exercises. The President was accompanied by Secretary Loeb, and occupied a special car attached to the regular express on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

President Roosevelt is coming to Brooklyn to-day to take part in the Memorial Day exercises. He will arrive in Jersey City, over the Pennsylvania Road, at about 7 o'clock this morning. A delegation of Brooklyn citizens, including members of the Union League of Brooklyn, will meet him at the station. At the Brooklyn landing he will be met by a detachment of mounted men of Troop C, who will escort him to the Union League Club, Grant Square, Brooklyn. The President will breakfast there.

After breakfast the President will start for Bedford Avenue and Eastern Parkway, where the statue of Gen. Henry W. Slocum is to be unveiled. Commissioner of Parks Michael J. Kennedy will present the statue to the city. The statue will be unveiled by Miss Gertrude Slocum. The President will then deliver an address. After he has concluded, Mayor McClellan will accept the statue for the city.

About this time the Memorial Day parade is scheduled to arrive, and the President will review it. It is expected that about 10,000 men will be in line. The parade will include all the marines from the navy yard and also the men from the near-by forts.

After this the President plans to go to the Naval Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association on Sands Street, where he is to make another speech. Miss Helen Gould is expected to be present. As the President is to leave for Washington again at 1 o'clock, there is some doubt if he will be able to get to the Young Men's Christian Association. The Committee of Arrangements said last night, however, that if the President consents the parade will pause and he will review the rest of it as he passes along Bedford Avenue. Mr. Roosevelt will not set foot in Manhattan.

SUNDAY BALL NOT FORBIDDEN.

Police Commissioner Tells Rules That Must Be Observed.

Police Commissioner McAdoo said yesterday that he had learned that games of baseball on Sunday, especially in the Bronx, at which no admission was charged and the neighborhood was not annoyed, had been stopped by the police. In these instances, the Commissioner said, the police had exceeded their authority.

Mr. McAdoo said that his orders were that games where admission was charged, where score-cards were sold, where the games were advertised or where they were an annoyance to the neighborhood must be prevented. But games without these features were not included, he said. The Commissioner said he did not intend stopping all Sunday baseball, but only games in which the four restrictions are not observed.

In three cases involving baseball playing on Sunday before Magistrate Mayo in the Morrisania Court yesterday the Magistrate discharged two of the prisoners outright, and paroled three others until to-day, by which time he will have considered the recent opinion of Corporation Counsel Delany on the subject of Sunday baseball.

CASSINI'S TALK UNOFFICIAL.

Russian Official Version of His Visit to the President.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 29.—According to the Foreign Office, the conversation of Count Cassini, the retiring Ambassador to the United States, with President Roosevelt, in which the question of the political construction that might be placed on Secretary Taft's prospective visit to Japan and the Philippines was raised, was entirely unofficial, and not upon instructions from the Russian Government. The President assured Count Cassini that Secretary Taft's visit was entirely devoid of political significance.

Plan to Hiss Alfonso in Paris.

PARIS, May 29.—The police have taken extreme measures to prevent the proposed Socialist demonstration against King Alfonso. Trades councils have adopted resolutions to hiss the King along the routes he will follow. The Anarchists are distributing circulars warning the public of the danger involved in witnessing the royal procession.

May Sue in Foreign Jurisdiction.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The Supreme Court of the United States to-day affirmed the opinion of the Circuit Court in the case of the Great Western Mining Company vs. Harris, the decision holding that a receiver in one Federal jurisdiction may bring suit in a foreign jurisdiction.

An Unknown Land.

From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Among the visitors at an art exhibition were two old ladies from the country. They were examining with great interest a bas-relief of a young Greek shepherd, beneath which were inscribed the words, "Executed in terra cotta."

"I wonder where Terra Cotta is," ventured the elder of the two, turning to her companion.

"Well, now, I ought to know," hesitated the other, "but I can't seem to place it just now."

"Ah, well," rejoined the first speaker, as they passed on, "it must be a dreadful place if they execute harmless young boys like that there."

The East.

From The Portland Oregonian.

"Yes, I've just returned from a two months' visit in the East," the Portland young lady was saying, "and, oh, I had such a lovely time! Those Easterners are so different from us, though."

"What points did you visit?" inquired the new-comer in Oregon. "I do hope you saw dear old Boston."

"Boston!" the Portland girl ejaculated; "I should say not. I was in Montana."

SERMON UNDER WINDOW OF J. P. MORGAN'S OFFICE

Exhorting Curb Brokers to Give Everybody a Square Deal.

A. B. PARKER HAPPENS ALONG

Just in Time to Hear the Street Choir Sing, "Throw Out the Life Line."

The revivalists who are campaigning the city held noonday services yesterday opposite the Stock Exchange, and directly under the window where J. P. Morgan may be seen sitting at his desk when here. The curb brokers cheered, the grand boys and messengers forsook their traditional victims, the pushcart folk, to crowd about, and the rest of the Street looked on from windows and sidewalks in a mildly interested way.

The revival truck came into Broad Street from Lower Broadway, a course that necessitated running the gantlet of the curb market in front of the Broad Exchange Building. In it were the Rev. Dr. Mottet, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion; the Rev. Dr. Wallace McMillan of the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church; the Rev. Dr. Frank Mason North, Secretary of the Church Extension Society of the Methodist Church; the Rev. George Graff of the Woodlawn Chapel, Brooklyn; the Rev. Thomas Houston, a blind evangelist, and two musicians, one a cornetist and one a vocalist.

True to its custom, the curb market stopped trading to cheer the revivalists. The wagon took up a position first on the side of the street toward the Stock Exchange, but some functionary came out to request them to move away, and so the truck was driven across under the windows of Morgan & Co. Perhaps a couple of hundred people had gathered around when the Rev. Dr. Mottet began to speak. He had not been talking long when some ill-intentioned individual threw a glass of water from an upper window in the Mills Building. Most of the water went on the audience, and Dr. Mottet was not disturbed by the half a dozen drops that spattered down on his coat. He spoke only for a few minutes, telling his hearers that if they dealt squarely with their fellows in the everyday affairs of life they would be doing more for the world than if they went around with a long face preaching sermons.

When Dr. Mottet was done and all had stood with bared heads for prayer the singers in the truck started up "Throw Out the Life Line." About this time ex-Judge Alton B. Parker came down the street in his inevitable frock coat and silk hat. A roll of ticker tape was sealed out of a window and floated down over the crowd, unrolling so as narrowly to miss the headgear of the late Presidential candidate.

Another party of evangelists chose the steps of the Custom House, directly opposite the National City Bank, as the scene of their meeting.

Gas Company's Men Out on the East Side Long Before Dawn.

All over the upper east side for the last two weeks the men who turn off the lights have been at work before the first sparrow began to give the reveille to his comrades with his "peek, peek, peek." No intelligent sparrow would think of arising before the first suggestion of dawn, but the busy Italians of the gas companies are at work turning the lights out when there is at least half an hour of darkness left.

This is also true all over the upper west side. Here and there at a street corner a light is left burning for the benefit of a policeman whose threat to use his night stick on the agent of the company does more than the Commissioner of Water, Gas and Electricity is able to do. It was said at his office yesterday there was no way of correcting the evil, as there are no night inspectors of lights. It was said that the city could act if the public would send detailed information of the time and place where the lights were put out too early. The men who put out the lights have other jobs in the day, and this is the reason they are in such a hurry to earn their money from the gas company.

The green lights of the Mercer Street Police Station did not shine until 8:05 o'clock last night. The Sergeant, weary of waiting for the lamplighter, finally sent one of the reserves with a box of matches to do the man's work.

WORLD'S CONGRESS AT WORK.

Minister Tittoni Presides at the Agricultural Meeting in Rome.

ROME, May 29.—The first working session of the Congress called to discuss an International Chamber of Agriculture took place to-day at the Corsini Palace in the presence of the Diplomatic Corps and all the delegates. Rechid Bey, the Turkish Ambassador, proposed Foreign Minister Tittoni for President of the Congress, and he was unanimously elected.

Minister Tittoni, in returning thanks for his appointment, said the Italian government in calling the Congress put no limits on its deliberations, but merely pointed out the subjects to be discussed, with the hope that an International Chamber of Agriculture would be created. The Congress adjourned to Tuesday.

AGAINST LONDON TUBE PLAN.

Commons Committee Unfavorable to the Pneumatic Bill.

LONDON, May 29.—The special committee of the House of Commons appointed to consider the matter has decided against the Pneumatic bill, providing for the installation in London of electric light and pneumatic tube systems similar to those in use in America.

There was considerable opposition on the part of the municipal authorities on the ground that the work would necessitate much tearing up of streets.

It is understood that J. Pierpont Morgan was among the promoters of the company, which had a capital of $20,000,000. Ninety-five miles of double tubing and 172 stations were proposed.

CHOATE BIDS KING GOOD-BYE.

Visit with Mrs. Choate Made at Request of British Sovereigns.

LONDON, May 29.—Mr. Choate, the retiring American Ambassador, and Mrs. Choate called at Buckingham Palace this afternoon to bid farewell to King Edward and Queen Alexandra.

The visit was made at the special request of their Majesties, who desired to say good-bye to Mrs. Choate as well as to the Ambassador.

Whitelaw Reid, the new Ambassador to Great Britain, will be presented by Foreign Minister Lansdowne to King Edward at noon on June 5, when he will present his credentials. The Ambassador will drive from his residence to Buckingham Palace in a royal carriage. Mr. Reid will arrive in time to participate in the programme of the reception to the King of Spain.

Jurisdiction Over National Banks.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The Supreme Court of the United States to-day decided the case of Van Reid vs. the People's Bank of Lebanon, Penn., appealed on writ of error from the New York Court of Appeals. The question involved was whether State courts could acquire jurisdiction and attach property of a National bank organized in another State. It was decided that the National Bank act prevents any such jurisdiction.

READY FOR THE RAILS IN SUBWAY AT BATTERY

Contractors Finish Their Work on Loop and Celebrate.

GET A BRASS BAND TO HELP

They Now Expect to Have Trains Running Down to South Ferry by July 1.

The Battery loop of the Subway was completed yesterday afternoon. A man can now walk underground from the completed end of the railroad at Dey Street clear to the Battery and around the loop and back again. Of course, the railroad tracks have not yet been laid in the loop, but the work of the contractor was completed so far as the loop was concerned, and now all that remains to be done is to finish the excavation and cementing between Rector Street and Bowling Green, lay the tracks, and put in the electric equipment on these lower sections of the Subway.

The completion of the loop was celebrated by the 350 workmen employed in its construction, all of whom are in the employ of the New York Tunnel Contracting Company, operated by Andrew Onderdonk. The loop celebration started at 6 o'clock last night, when the general foreman in charge of the loop formally declared that it had been completed and was ready for the tracks. The 350 men who had been at work on the loop since Aug. 6, 1903, almost two years, expected the completion of the work yesterday, and had made elaborate preparations to celebrate.

When they marched out of the tunnel at 6 o'clock they had a band of eighteen musicians waiting for them. Foreman Sullivan formally announced that the loop was finished, and Thomas J. Brown, General Superintendent for the contractors, made a little speech congratulating the workmen. Then the band crashed out with "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Foreman Sullivan then delivered an address congratulating the contracting firm and its Superintendent, telling of the many obstacles which they had to overcome before finishing up the tunnel loop. In concluding his address, Mr. Sullivan presented to Superintendent Brown, on behalf of the workmen, a handsome gold watch with a diamond-studded fob attached to it. Mr. Sullivan explained that the workingmen thought so much of their "boss" that they had voluntarily "chipped in" to buy Mr. Brown a watch.

Speeches were made by Percy Onderdonk, son of the contractor; Joseph Hickey, General Superintendent of blacksmiths; John Nelson, General Superintendent of carpenters and builders; Foreman N. B. Flynn, Charles Evans, W. W. Weatherspoon, and Patrick Halloran. Mr. Brown thanked his men for the gift. The band played "He's a Jolly Good Fellow," and the men were led into the big contracting office in Battery Park, where there was plenty to eat and drink. Those who did not care for champagne had all the beer they could drink, fifteen kegs being tapped. Later the employers celebrated the completion of the loop with a banquet at the Great Eastern Hotel.

The Subway section which was completed yesterday extends from Bowling Green parallel to State Street down to Whitehall Street and around under Whitehall Street, forming a loop passing the ferries and going back under the roadway opposite the Barge Office and under Battery Park to Bowling Green again.

The Degnon contracting firm has the section from Bowling Green to Rector Street, and this section, it is said, will be completed within a month, so that cars for the public will be running all the way to the Battery and around the loop by July 1.

The workmen at the Battery loop experienced much difficulty from the flow of water which leaked into the cut. The loop almost skirts the Battery sea wall, and was dug through the old island section of the Battery end of New York. While excavating the contractors were compelled to keep five pumps going continually for many months as the water came in, they declare, at a rate of 3,000 gallons a minute.

The work of restoring Battery Park to its former condition will proceed tomorrow, and will, it is said, be completed in a month.

BETRAYED BY PUMPKIN PIE.

Attached to String, It Led to Truant Danny's Lair on the Roof.

"I always knew," said Judge Wyatt in the Children's Court yesterday, "that boys hated school; but I never heard of a truant so desperate that he hid in a water tank and hoisted up pumpkin pie on a string."

Before the astonished Judge stood "Danny" Schafer, thirteen years old, and his mother, who lives at 31 West Sixty-fifth Street, and who last Wednesday caused a general alarm to be sent out for her son, who had been missing since the day before.

"Danny" went out on Tuesday morning, and when he did not return at bedtime Mrs. Schafer became alarmed. On Wednesday, when she received a letter by mail from "Danny," who said that he was having an awful time, she fancied he had been kidnapped. Several other letters of the same sort arrived.

On Sunday night Mrs. Schafer met a chum of "Danny's" going up the stairs with a parcel. She asked him where he was going. The chum bolted. A few minutes later Mrs. Schafer saw something black outside the kitchen window. It was a pumpkin pie hooked on a string with a bent hatpin. The pie vanished upward. That pumpkin pie solved the mystery, for where there is pumpkin pie, Mrs. Schafer says, "Danny" is not far away.

Yesterday morning Mrs. Schafer found her son in the water tank on the roof, with a good stock of light literature and enough pies to feed him for a fortnight.

Judge Wyatt sent "Danny" to the Catholic Protectory for two months.

MRS. FISKE HIRED A HALL.

Unable to Get a Salt Lake Theatre, She Turns Lecturer.

SALT LAKE CITY, May 29.—Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, who was barred from a professional appearance in Salt Lake City through her inability to secure any of the local theatres, hired a public hall to-night and made an address on what she termed the theatrical trust and its effect.

Mrs. Fiske said she was sure the local managers would be glad to open the doors of their theatres to her, if they dared; but they dared not do so, she said. In the East and on the Pacific Coast, she said, there were theatres open to independent actors, but the theatrical syndicate had endeavored to block the way to California by holding the avenues of approach, so that it would be impossible for an independent actor to fill a tour from Chicago to San Francisco. The trust, she said, made it impossible for an independent actor to play in Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, or Salt Lake.

She declared that the patrons of the theatres had it in their power to liberate their theatres from unfair and unjust domination. Her appearance was under the auspices of the Press Club. A small admission fee was charged, and the proceeds were given to the orphanages of Salt Lake City.

Americans Presented at Court.

LONDON, May 29.—King Edward and Queen Alexandra held their third Court of the year at Buckingham Palace this evening. The Americans presented by Mrs. Carter, wife of John R. Carter, First Secretary of Embassy, were Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Miss Hallie Ermine Rives of Richmond, Va.; Miss Blanche Shoemaker, Mrs. Richard Mortimer, and Miss Mortimer of New York.

A BROADWAY TRAGEDY.

Cast, a Policeman and Two Shoulder-Padded Actors—They Moved On.

They were standing at Broadway and Forty-second Street talking about dear old Broadway. They wore brown suits with five-pounds of padding in the shoulders. One had on a "flasher" weighing—well, it couldn't be computed in karats. The other wore a stick pin that tried feebly to hold its own in the presence of the "flasher."

"Yes," said he of the pin, "yes, we closed in Peoria last week after a tremendously successful season. I was the star, you know, and on that last night I was literally swamped with flowers and all that sort of thing, don't you know. Really, I was a bit sorry that the season was over, although I have played the part 875 times. No other actor ever accomplished that, I believe, with the possible exception of Joe Jefferson. Yes, indeed, and in Peoria one of the richest women sent me a note—"

"Move on!" put in a policeman, and passed on.

"What do you think of that now?" asked he of the "flasher." "These policemen will have to be curbed. They don't seem to know who we are. That's the fourth time I've heard that within two days. By the way, our show, too, was a roaring cinch. We never made a stop but what the S. R. O. was hung out by 8 o'clock at the latest. The critics all along the line groveled at our feet. I remember one night—"

"Move on!" put in another policeman. "You will have to keep moving, gentlemen. It's the Commish's order. Two of us each night are detailed to keep youse fellows from interfering with traffic on the sidewalk. Get inside to con each other."

The two men assumed the expression that goes with "ministers of grace, defend us." Then they stepped into a café, ordered a ham sandwich and a glass of "pale."

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

This week, like the preceding, will be one of weddings, and several of the more interesting will be in town. The marriage on Saturday of Miss Helen White Stevens and Gilliaet Ghequiere Schroeder will unite two very old families, Miss Stevens being a descendant of the old Chanler family.

The wedding of Miss Elizabeth Tuckerman, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bayard Tuckerman, to George W. Elkins is set for June 10, and will take place at Ipswich, Mass., where, at Sunswick, the Tuckermans, whose town house is in East Thirty-second Street, have a Summer home.

The wedding of Miss Amy Phipps and the Hon. Frederick Guest is set for June 28 in St. George's Church, Hanover Square, London, at 2:30 o'clock. The invitations to New York friends were mailed here in New York, although the Phippses have all sailed for England.

Mr. and Mrs. Welcome G. Hitchcock, who spent the Winter at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, are settled for the Summer at their country home in Scarsdale, Westchester County.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Forbes McCreery (Miss Claire Byron) are booked to sail on June 21 on the Baltic. They will spend the Summer in European travel.

Mrs. Charles W. Ogden and daughter, Miss Mary Ogden, of 12 East Seventy-ninth Street, are booked to sail to-day. Mrs. Ogden has taken, for the second year, a shooting box in Scotland, where they expect to spend most of the Summer.

Miss Blanche Le Roy Shoemaker was presented at court last evening in London. Her mother, who was to have joined her daughter and Mr. Shoemaker abroad, and who was also to have been presented, was prevented from going by illness. Miss Shoemaker and her father are expected to return early in June. They sailed in the late Winter, made an automobile tour of Italy, and spent some time in Paris before going to London.

Oliver Perin, who is to marry Miss Winona King, will give his bachelor dinner at Delmonico's to-morrow evening.

Louis B. Haggin has returned from Peru. Mrs. Haggin, who has been in Italy, was joined some weeks ago by her daughter, the Countess Festetics, and they will probably return very shortly.

Henry C. Cryder, whose marriage to Miss Louise Hollins is set for June 7, will give his bachelor dinner at Delmonico's on Thursday evening.

WEDDINGS OF A DAY.

PIERCE—CUPTIS.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, May 29.—Calvary Episcopal Church, Summit, was the scene this afternoon of the wedding of Miss Katherine Robinson Cuptis to Homer Hill Pierce. The church was decorated in pink and white roses and palms. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Walker Gwynne, assisted by the Rev. Henry Mesier of Far Rockaway. The bride wore a gown of white satin and carried a bouquet of white orchids and lilies of the valley. The maid of honor, her sister, Miss Mildred Cuptis, wore white silk mull with Valenciennes lace and a pink hat, and carried pink sweet peas and lilies of the valley. The bridal party included four bridesmaids, Miss Helen Curtis and Miss Lena Cuptis of the bride; Miss Fanny Pierce of Portland, a sister of the bridegroom, and Miss Elizabeth Upton of Orange. They were all attired in white silk mull with white hats, and carried bouquets of pink sweet peas and rose rosebuds. Phoenix Ingraham of New York was best man, and the ushers were Joseph Cotton, Winfred Denison, Dr. Mortimer Warren, and Scott McClanahan of New York; Thomas Pierce of Charleston, and Chace Eastman of Portland. A reception followed at "Fairfax," the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William J. Curtis, on Summit Avenue. The couple will spend their honeymoon in Europe.

BARBOUR—COOKE.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The marriage of Miss Helen Nicholson Cooke to Frederick K. Barbour took place to-day at noon in St. Patrick's Church in the presence of their immediate relatives. No formal invitations were issued for the ceremony, which was conducted with great simplicity owing to the recent death of the bride's grandfather, Rear Admiral Nicholson. Miss Nicholson came from New York for the occasion, escorted his niece to the altar. The couple left for New York immediately after the ceremony.

Japanese Visitors at Luna Park.

Three officers of the Government railway system of Japan, who were delegates to the International Railway Congress, held in Washington some time ago, went to Luna Park last night to see the sights. They found it hard getting around, for everybody stopped to extend congratulations. The Japanese are members of a party that has been touring the country since the congress adjourned. They visited the Hudson River tunnel yesterday, lunched at the Lawyers' Club, and spent the afternoon in seeing the Subway. After dinner the whole party went to Luna Park on the private car of President Winter of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company.

Midland Beach Opens To-day.

Midland Beach, Staten Island, opens for the season to-day. It has a pier which extends two thousand feet over the ocean, a famous board walk, a theatre seating 1,500 persons, and all sorts of attractions to please the children. At present it can be reached by the Staten Island ferry leaving the foot of Whitehall Street, and thence by trolley, but later in the season steamers will run direct to the Beach.

IF C. F. MURPHY WIRED ON GAS TO ALBANY

Page Says Telegram Must Have Read, "Get the Wampum."

ATTACKS CITIZENS' UNION

For Seeking Light from McCarren—A Talk on Gas to Mount Morris Republicans.

State Senator Alfred R. Page last night declared to the members of the Mount Morris Republican Club, at their home, 8 West One Hundred and Thirteenth Street, that the Democratic organization of New York City, and not the Republican Party of the State, defeated 80-cent gas. He also attacked the Citizens' Union bitterly.

"In one way," he said, "the Republican Party was responsible for the defeat of 80-cent gas. It controlled the Assembly. I say to you, though, that the people of Greater New York are not concerned in the vote of the member from Oneonta or the members from Utica. What does vitally concern them is the vote of the men they themselves sent to represent them.

"There were eight Republican Senators from this city. All but one voted for eighty-cent gas. There were fourteen Democratic Senators. All but four voted against it. Charlie Murphy says he sent a telegram to Albany regarding the measure. If he did it paraphrased the now popular song and read:

> Big Chief sits in his tepee,
> Wired his braves in Al-ba-nee,
> Swampum, Swampum—git the wampum,
> Tam-man-ee.

"Strange things have happened since the gas agitation began. The Citizens' Union, which, in its own opinion, is composed of the truly good, has declared the question non-partisan, and sought for light from the Hon. Patrick Henry McCarren and the Hon. Charles Murphy. I don't think the Hon. Mr. McCarren represents the high type of American citizenship for which the Union poses. The descent from Seth Low to Pat McCarren is amazing, but our friends in the Union seem to have no difficulty in making it. Its ideals must have been reconstructed."

SUPERFLUOUS BABIES.

"I Can't Manage Two," Said the Sergeant—But He Had To.

Two foundling babies were taken within a few minutes to the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station yesterday afternoon by children who had found them while playing. For nearly an hour the station house was like a nursery, for the babies voiced their grievances so loudly that the reserve policemen asleep upstairs came down in despair and took turns at trying to console the mites until the patrol wagon was ready to take them to Bellevue Hospital.

The first baby, a two-months-old boy, was brought to the station by John P. Lyons, thirteen years old, of 1,714 Seventh Avenue, who said that he had found the little one in the hallway of his home.

The baby has golden hair, blue eyes, and was fairly well dressed. It set up a howl, and while Sergt. Lynch was trying to coax it back to smiles the door opened. In came little Josephine Lehman of 1,957 Second Avenue with a baby girl in her arms.

"Say, Mr. Policeman," said she, "I found this in the ash barrel back of our yard."

"I can't manage two babies," groaned the Sergeant, as the baby girl followed the example of the baby boy and howled.

The police are trying to find the parents of the babies, but so far have had no success.

"CREATION" AT DREAMLAND.

Big Illusion Show Pleases Thousands —Scene Shifting a Feature.

They put on a big new show at Dreamland last night. It is called "Creation," and its many scenes show the beginning of the world. There is a scene for each day, the sixth showing the newly created Adam and Eve. As a spectacle "Creation" is about as wonderful a thing as Coney Island has ever seen. Thousands saw it last night.

Volcanos and chasms and abysses are shunted across the line of vision with as much ease and rapidity as if they were mere bits of paper. It was next to impossible for a spectator to persuade himself that the bits of island in the background were not miles and miles away. The scene painter did his work well.

The announcer, with his formidable adjectives and glowing reminiscences of the world's beginning, was a fit adjunct to the spectacle. "Illimitable space enshrouded in impenetrable darkness," was one of the phrases which brought huge delight to the crowd. The last scene of all showed heaven, with a quintet of golden-haired angels. A choir invisible sang a hymn as the curtain went down.

The scenes are all arranged to fit the narrative in the First Chapter of the Book of Genesis. The announcer repeated the verses of the chapter as the scenes rolled on and off.

Sousa to Play at the Hippodrome.

John Philip Sousa's band will play at the Hippodrome on Sunday night, June 11. The sale of seats will begin on Thursday this week, and regular prices will prevail. Opportunity is here offered for nearly 6,000 people to hear the famous organization at rates lower than ever offered before in the city.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—There will be showers and thunderstorms to-day in New England, the Middle Atlantic States, the lower lake region, and the Ohio Valley; also in the middle Mississippi Valley, Arkansas, and the Southwest. The temperature will fall in the middle Mississippi and the Ohio Valleys. It will be warmer in the Northwest. The weather Wednesday will continue showery in New England and the Middle and South Atlantic States.

The winds along the New England and Middle Atlantic Coast will be southwest to west; South Atlantic and East Gulf Coasts, light south; Gulf Coast, fresh southeast, and on the lower lakes and upper lakes fresh northeast.

Steamers departing to-day for European ports will have light to fresh southwest winds and showery weather to the Grand Banks.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND WEDNESDAY

Eastern New York—Showers Tuesday; cooler in interior; Wednesday showers; variable winds, becoming fresh northeast.

New Jersey—Showers Tuesday and Wednesday; cooler in interior Tuesday; fresh south winds, becoming east.

New England—Showers and cooler Tuesday; Wednesday showers; fresh west winds, becoming northeast.

Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland—Showers Tuesday and Wednesday; cooler Tuesday; light, variable winds.

	1904.	1905.
3 A. M.	62	60
6 A. M.	58	61
9 A. M.	64	71
12 M.	77	74
3 P. M.	75	74
6 P. M.	73	72
9 P. M.	66	67
12 P. M.	62	67

The thermometer of the Weather Bureau is 285 feet above the street level.

The average temperature yesterday was 68; corresponding date 1904, 68; corresponding date for last twenty-five years, 64.

The thermometer registered 67 degrees at 8 A. M. and the same at 8 P. M. yesterday, the maximum temperature being 77 degrees at 10:30 A. M. and the minimum 60 degrees at 3 A. M. The humidity was 78 per cent. at 8 A. M. and 86 per cent. at 8 P. M.

AN ITALIAN SHYLOCK.

Antonio Maiori Plays the Role at the People's Theatre.

The Bowery is having a little Shakespeare festival of its own this week, and if last night's performance at the People's may be taken as a criterion that is one place where the poet's name does not spell ruin. Antonio Maiori is the bright particular star, and he began his season with a performance of "The Merchant of Venice," which, if it does not eclipse the recent Mansfield and Adler productions, apparently serves its purpose in giving younger Italy some sort of a perspective on English drama.

Scenically it doesn't provide much of a perspective on anything—certainly nothing Venetian—for the Merchant makes his appearance at the head of a long street, flanked on either side by tall, red-brick buildings, with many windows covered with yellow Post Office paper. As the first act progresses the calcium man produces lightning changes from sunlight to twilight, from twilight to darkness, and the yellow paper is lighted from behind with a most remarkable effect. It is a bit disconcerting, too, to hear the prompter speaking all the lines before the actors have a chance to show whether they are up in them or not; but it is just possible that this sort of Shakespeare is better than no Shakespeare at all. At any rate, there was no doubt about the enjoyment it gave last night.

We are not prepared to admit that Signor Maiori reminds us in any way of his brilliant countryman Salvini, but that he has a following of his own was demonstrated pretty clearly last night. The theatre was filled, all the boxes being occupied by black-eyed beauties, who showered bouquets upon the stage just about the time that poor Shylock was most in need of consolation. For he had been roundly hissed by the gallery, one overwrought auditor remarking quite audibly that it "serva him righta—he wassa badda fell'."

As a matter of fact, however, we do not recall having seen any Shylock who struck us as being quite so jovial as this one, especially in the earlier scenes, but for this perhaps his make-up was responsible. Making allowance for the absence of the little pine tree, it came nearer being a duplicate of the roly-poly German images displayed at Christmas time than anything else.

Signor Maiori is very confidential with his audience. He enforces his points with a wink or a nod, and like most of the actors of his race, gesticulates with the utmost freedom.

His stage business is of the conventional sort, the performance generally following traditional methods. Lancelot Gobbo and his father create no end of amusement in the old familiar way, and the former, wearing a hump and with his nostrils painted black, is a constant source of delight to the uninitiated playgoers.

On Thursday night Signor Maiori is to appear as Othello.

ON SATAN'S MOUNT AS A PLAY.

Dramatization of Dwight Tilton's Novel Produced in Boston.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 29.—"On Satan's Mount," a dramatization by Ira B. Goodrich of Dwight Tilton's novel, had its first presentation on any stage at the Hollis Street Theatre to-night. As both the author and the dramatist are Bostonians there was a very friendly audience.

George W. Sammis, who is in charge of the production, has given the play a company which includes John E. Kellerd, Joseph Brennan, George Backus, Lindsay Morrison, Dorothy Donnelly, Mary Sanders, Grace Griswold, and Marion Hutchins.

The play shows Washington life in its inner workings, the President of the United States, Cabinet officers, and Senators being among the characters.

AT THE THEATRES YESTERDAY

The chief entertainers yesterday at the Alhambra were Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, who presented their sketch, "Journey's End in Lovers Meeting." Other special features were introduced by Herrmann the Great and Louise Gunning.

"In the Palace of the King," which was presented by Viola Allen a few seasons ago, was revived yesterday at Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Theatre. Beatrice Morgan played Donna Dolores and William J. Kelley was Don John.

John Paul Jones is the latest addition to the World in Wax at the Eden Musee. The American gallery has been rearranged and includes events dating from 1776 up to the death of Gen. Lawton in the Philippines.

The old popular melodrama "The Span of Life" was presented to two enthusiastic audiences yesterday at the Windsor.

At Huber's Fourteenth Street Museum Herr Ritter, the German illusionist, was the special feature. He presented many mystifying tricks.

Jacob P. Adler, supported by the stock company, appeared as Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice" yesterday at Proctor's Sixty-eighth Street Theatre.

The Metropolis started a short season of vaudeville yesterday afternoon, the headliners consisting of Rooney's Street Urchins and Jane Courtope and company.

Williams and Walker began the last week of their successful run in "In Dahomey" at the Grand Opera House last evening before a large and enthusiastic audience.

Adele Ritchie is the chief attraction at Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre. Next to her in importance are the Russell brothers. Others are Murray and Mack, O'Brien and Havel, and Charles Vane.

Last night the Yorkville Theatre stock company appeared in Wilson Barrett's old success, "The Silver King." Anne Sutherland played the part of Nellie Denver, and Maurice Freeman Wilfred Denver.

This week will be the last opportunity to see Chevalier. After this engagement at the Colonial he sails immediately for England. Other entertainers at the Colonial are the Four Mortons and Redini and Arthur.

"The Black Mask," a popular melodrama, is the week's offering at the New Star this week.

The stock company at Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre gave an elaborate production of "Charley's Aunt" yesterday. Etienne Girardot, who was specially engaged for the week, received a hearty welcome by the audience. The remaining parts were played by Adelaide Woodruff, Katharine Grey, and other members of the company.

Laura Burt was the chief attraction yesterday at Hurtig & Seamon's. Prominent also on the bill were Nina Morris and Arthur Hoops and Dorothy Russell.

Adelaide Keim began the second week of her season at the Harlem Opera House last evening with a revival of "Heartsease," a familiar romantic drama often presented by Henry Miller. The audience was most liberal with its applause.

The first place on the current bill at Hammerstein's Victoria is occupied by May Yohe and Putnam Bradlee Strong. Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne in "Town Hall To-night" are a second big feature. Eugene Cowles and the Hengler sisters are also excellent entertainers.

At Keith's this week Edwin Stevens has the place of honor on the programme. Julius Steger and Terley also figure prominently. Others are John Healy and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Volker. As an added attraction Alice Davenport presented a one-act dramatic sketch entitled "Now."

The musical attractions that remain are: Frank Daniels in "Sergeant Brue," at the Knickerbocker; Sam Bernard in "The Rollicking Girl," at the Herald Square, and Jeff De Angelis in "Fantana," at the Lyric.

The plays that remain are "Quincy Adams Sawyer," at the Academy; Bertha Kalich in "Fedora," at the American; "Sag Harbor" in the Hoorah," at the Hudson; David Warfield in "The Music Master," at the Bijou, and Marie Tempest in "The Freedom of Suzanne," at the Empire.

Col. Gaston Bordeverry, the French marksman, made a hit last night at the Hippodrome by playing "Tammany" by rifle shot. Among the newcomers this week are the Five Sallazars, who give a thrilling aerial ring performance. The theatre was packed and the audience was enthusiastic.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Henry Wolfsohn cabled his representative here yesterday that he has arranged with the artists who are to accompany Emma Eames on her forthcoming concert tour. The tour begins October next and continues until the middle of December. Mr. Wolfsohn has engaged Ambert Webber, pianist; Josef Hollman, 'cellist, and Emilio de Gogorza, baritone.

Edgar L. Davenport made his appearance in vaudeville yesterday at the Empire Theatre, Boston, playing for the first time a sketch, "The Only Way," written for him by Stanislaus Stange.

Arthur Byron is to appear at Hurtig & Seamon's next week in a one-act play written for him by Paul Armstrong, author of "The Heir to the Hoorah."

SHEA OUT, CHICAGO SEES HOPE OF PEACE

Union Forces Now in Mood to Treat with Employers.

STILL SOME STRIKE RIOTING

Police Escorting Teams Pelted with Bricks—Grand Jury Investigates Blackmail.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 29.—The teamsters' strike, now free from the dominating influence of President Shea, offers more chance for the reopening of peace negotiations. A new impetus was imparted today by the move of the National Executive Board of the teamsters, which is now in control of the strike forces. The move was directed toward the big express companies. Shea is left out of the negotiations entirely.

Reports from New York said that the express companies were still firm. This is not taken, however, to mean that the companies will refuse to consider a request for reopening negotiations providing the teamsters keep Shea in the background. Levy Mayer is expected to return Wednesday from his consultation with the express company managers in New York.

In spite of the outlook for peace the area of the strike is spreading, but this does not preclude the possibility of an early settlement. The strike spread today in the ranks of the coal teamsters. The Weaver Coal Company announced deliveries to-morrow to the American Express Company. This means a strike of the Weaver men. The Weaver Company has applied to the Employers' Teaming Company for non-union drivers. The striking carpenters were ordered back to work to-day.

The attempt of a lumber wagon belonging to the Rittenhouse and Embree Lumber Company to pass through Ashland Avenue was disputed every foot of the way by a mob, which finally numbered more than 1,000. The non-union teamster and the two policemen on the wagon were targets for bricks, but were not severely injured. It took three hours to go from Thirty-fifth Street to Fifty-second Street and back.

Drivers for a number of additional lumber companies were locked out to-day in accordance with the decision of the Lumbermen's Association. Secretary Hooper announced that all of the members of the association except one were hauling with non-union drivers. Preparations were made on a large scale to make deliveries.

The Grand Jury attempted to probe the blackmail features of the strike to-day, but it did not accomplish much. It is reported that the jurors were told that a certain amount of money would have settled the strike at several stages of its progress. More testimony on this point is expected to-morrow. The witnesses heard to-day gave little more evidence than was already brought to light by the April Grand Jury.

Levy Mayer, attorney for the Chicago employers, who came here to confer with the heads of the express companies, will have to depart without seeing Senator Platt. Mr. Mayer telephoned to Mr. Platt asking for an appointment. Mr. Platt was just about leaving for his home in Highland Mills, where he intends to spend Decoration Day, and replied that he could not make an appointment before Wednesday. Mr. Mayer told him he would leave for Chicago to-day and could therefore make no appointment. He had conferences, however, with the heads of the other companies.

For some days there have been rumors that the Civic Federation might try to end the strike. It was learned that Daniel O'Keefe, President of the International Longshoremen's Union, and John Mitchell, President of the United Mine Workers, had been in Chicago ten days ago. Both are members of the Civic Federation, and Mitchell is also a member of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor.

Mitchell, who was in New York yesterday, would not discuss the Chicago strike. He said he did not know its present status. He added that he would leave for Scranton to-day for the purpose of looking after the interests of the coal miners.

Mr. Mayer said last night:

"I have neither seen nor heard from the Civic Federation or its officers. The position of the Employers' Association and the express companies has been clearly defined, and there is nothing to add to what has already been made public. That position has been taken only after the most careful and painstaking consideration, and it is final."

Miss Heidelbach to Sing Abroad.

Among the passengers who will sail on the North German Lloyd liner Kronprinz Wilhelm to-day will be Miss Lillian Heidelbach, who will visit Berlin, Frankfort, Dresden, Munich, and Vienna. Miss Heidelbach, who is a member of the Metropolitan Opera House forces, will meet Mrs. Conried in Berlin, who will introduce her to various managers in the cities named, with the object of closing contracts for her with them for the forthcoming season.

Five Boer War Shows at Coney To-day

So that all the crowd expected at Brighton Beach to-day will be able to obtain seats the management of the Great Boer War has decided to have five performances at 2, 3:30, 5, 7, and 9 P. M. respectively, instead of two as usual. Several novel features have been added.

STUCK IN THE TRANSOM.

Policeman Pulled the Fat Butcher Through, but Not His Clothes.

Mason Herzig has a butcher store at 826 Courtlandt Avenue, in the Bronx. Associated with him is his brother, Morris. Both are stout men, but Morris can pass through places where Mason would stick.

Last night Morris put on his coat to go home. Mason said he had accounts to balance, and asked his brother to lock the door, so he wouldn't be bothered by late customers. At 9 o'clock Mason finished his work, put on his coat, and discovered the next moment that he had left his keys at home.

He tried the windows. They were all barred as a precaution against burglars. Mason knocked on the window until he attracted the attention of Policeman Suttle. At first Suttle thought Herzig was burglarizing his own store, but the butcher conveyed his story by semaphore.

Herzig got a barrel and placed it under the transom inside. Suttie got a milk box and placed it under the transom outside. They both climbed. Suttie encouraged; Mason groaned and squeezed and clawed.

"It's no use," said the butcher, "I can't get through."

He started to go back. But retreat was impossible. His strength was spent, and there he was—stuck. A crowd gathered and grinned. An hour passed. Suttie tried to sympathize. Herzig wanted to know what good sympathy was to a man stuck in a transom.

Then the policeman got Roundsman Parks, who is a strong man. The Roundsman got on the soap box and pulled. Mason came through with a mighty creaking of strained woodwork and a vicious rending of cloth. Morris, the brother, was telephoned to bring another suit of clothes.

MANITOBA'S GOVERNOR DEAD.

William Macdougall Had Held Many Offices in Canada.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, May 29.—The Hon. William Macdougall, Provincial Governor of Manitoba, died in Toronto to-day.

William Macdougall was born in Toronto, Jan. 25, 1822, and was for many years a prominent figure in Canadian journalism. From 1858 to 1882 he was a member of the Canadian Parliament; from 1862 to 1864 Commissioner of Crown Lands; a member of the Confederation Conferences 1864-67, and Minister of Public Works in 1867, in addition to holding many other prominent positions in the Dominion Government.

EX-PREMIER SILVELA DEAD.

Had Also Been Foreign and Marine Minister of Spain.

MADRID, May 29.—Don Francisco Silvela, former Premier, Foreign Minister, and Minister of Marine of Spain, died today.

As far back as May, 1903, a specialist pronounced his heart and nervous system to be very weak, and he was ordered to take a complete rest, with the result that he resigned with his Cabinet in July of that year.

Silvela since the death of Canovas del Castillo had been the foremost leader of the Spanish Conservatives.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

John Lefferts, Jr.

John Lefferts, Jr., a well-known resident of Flatbush, died on Sunday at his home, 68 Midwood Street. He was born in the old Lefferts homestead in Flatbush fifty-five years ago. Mr. Lefferts was graduated from Columbia Law School in 1876 and was associated for some years with the late Joseph W. Sutphen. He was one of the organizers of the Flatbush Trust Company, a Director of the Flatbush Water Company, and a member of the Montauk Club and the Holland and St. Nicholas Societies.

A. Brunel De Bost.

A. Brunel De Bost, a well-known dry-goods merchant, whose place of business was at 43 Leonard Street and who lived at 172 West Seventy-ninth Street, died suddenly at the North Jersey Country Club at Paterson, N. J., on Sunday. Mr. De Bost had been ailing for some time past. He was forty-three years old. He was single and lived with his mother. The funeral will take place from the house to-morrow.

Bishop Alexander MacDonell.

MONTREAL, May 29.—The Right Rev. Alexander MacDonell, Bishop of Alexandria, died to-day. He was seventy-two years old.

Obituary Notes.

WILLIAM E. DEBBLE, lawyer and farmer of Dunham's Basin and graduate of Yale University, class of 1888, died yesterday.

Judge JOSEPH CHRISTIAN, for many years a member of the Supreme Court of Virginia, died at Richmond, Va., yesterday in his seventy-seventh year.

JOHN W. WHITE, prominent in Masonic circles, died yesterday in Chicago. He was one of Col. Moseby's raiders in the civil war. For many years Mr. White was connected with the firm of Jevne & Co.

BESSON J. AUSTIN, for a number of years engaged in the manufacture of jewelry in this city, died at the Newark City Hospital yesterday, aged sixty years. Mr. Austin was a widower, and resided at 267 Sixth Avenue, Newark.

JAMES HENRY FALCONER died yesterday morning at his residence, 240 West Seventy-fifth Street. He was born on Feb. 22, 1827, at 377 Broadway, at that time the heart of the residential district. His father, William Falconer, a native of Perth, Scotland, was a prominent New York merchant. James Henry Falconer was a veteran of Company F, Seventh Regiment. For many years he was a broker in foreign exchange, but of late years had not been in active business. At his death he was Senior Warden of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church. A daughter and three sons survive him.

JUSTICE VAN BRUNT BURIED.

His Colleagues and Leading Members of Bar Attend the Services.

The entire bench of the Supreme Court of this district, with two exceptions, as well as the Appellate Division, many prominent members of the bar, and representatives of various clubs and organizations, attended the funeral yesterday of Charles H. Van Brunt, late Presiding Justice of the Appellate Division. The services were conducted at Justice Van Brunt's residence, 10 East Forty-sixth Street, by Bishop Greer. The burial was in Greenwood Cemetery. The Rev. Charles B. Ackley, vicar of St. Bartholomew's Chapel, conducted the services at the grave.

The honorary pall bearers were Justices Morgan J. O'Brien, George L. Ingraham, Edward Patterson, Chester B. McLaughlin, Edward W. Hatch, Frank C. Laughlin, Charles H. Truax, and Henry A. Gildersleeve.

Justice Vernon M. Davis was out of town and Justice Leventritt was unable to be present.

CAPT. GODDARD'S FUNERAL.

Will Take Place from All Souls' Church To-morrow.

The funeral of F. Norton Goddard, who died at his Summer home at Litchfield, Conn., on Sunday, will take place to-morrow at 1 P. M. from All Souls' Church in this city.

At a meeting of the Civic Club, held in the clubhouse, in Thirty-fourth Street, near Second Avenue, last night, resolutions of sympathy were adopted.

The club will march in a body to the church, at Fourth Avenue and Twentieth Street.

Resolutions of sympathy were also passed last night by the East Side Republican Club praising Capt. Goddard as a man and as leader of the district. The club will attend the funeral.

Brooklyn's Wretched Fielding Gives Victory to New York by 8 to 5.

Edward Hanlon in all his experience as a baseball manager has rarely had charge of a team that played so indifferently as the team at the Polo Grounds. Eason was as wild as a March hare, but even with his unsteadiness the New Yorks were entitled to but one run of their total of eight. Batch and Gessler made the most damaging errors, and it is said that a new record was established by Gessler in missing two fly balls in the same inning in succession. Five of the Brooklyns' runs were earned. These were sufficient to have won the game if their fielding had not been so raged.

Doescher, the left-handed pitcher of the Brooklyns, relieved Eason in the seventh inning, and while only one hit was recorded against him, a wild pitch materially aided the champions in scoring their last run in the eighth inning. Bowerman took the place of McGann in the seventh inning, and for disputing a decision of a third strike Owens was put off the field in the fifth inning. Malay covered second and Dobbs went to centre field. The score:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

"Rube" Waddell Responsible for New York's Defeat by 2 to 1.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—"Rube" Waddell's superb pitching enabled the Athletics to win from New York to-day by the score of 2 to 1. The big left-hander received poor support, and several times the misplays of his team mates gave the visitors chances which seemed as though runs must result. But each time, however, Waddell proved equal to the occasion, and after nine innings of masterful box work he landed his team a winner. The game was one of those close and exciting contests which keep the nerves tingling, and when the last man had been retired, leaving runners on third and second, Manager Mack heaved a sigh of relief and the spectators left the ground smiling and happy.

Two games will be played to-morrow. Coakley and Bender are carded to do the pitching for the Athletics, while Powell and Griffith will probably do the honors for New York.

EASTERN LEAGUE.

Merritt's Hit Over Fence Gave Jersey City the Victory.

Jersey City defeated Newark yesterday on the former's grounds by a score of 6 to 4. George Merritt did the trick for the winners. Although the locals started off with three runs in the opening inning, Newark got the lead in the fourth and held the advantage until the sixth, when Jersey City added another run, thus tying the score. In the eighth inning Bean, for Jersey City, singled and on Keister's teempted sacrifices got to third on Shea's wild throw to Mahling. Then Merritt set the "fans" wild by lifting the ball over the left-field fence for a home run. Thielman retired after the second inning, Newark getting four hits for a total of three runs. Capt. Bean concluded not to take any chances of losing the game, and McCann was substituted. The score:

PROVIDENCE, 10; BALTIMORE, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 29.—Providence found Wiltse an easy mark to-day, and shut out the Baltimores by a score of 10 to 0. The visitors could do nothing with Nops, getting but six scattered singles, and never were a factor in the game. The locals played perfectly in the field, while three costly errors were charged to the Baltimores. Score by innings:

	R.	H.	E.
Providence	1	0	0	4	0	5	0	0	—10	15	0
Baltimore	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	—0	5	3

Batteries—Nops and Thomas; Wiltse and Hearne. Attendance, 2,000.

FORDHAM, 6; GEORGETOWN, 5.

The team of Fordham University yesterday at Fordham Field defeated the strong Georgetown University nine for the second time this season in a game that was bitterly fought to the end by the score of 6 to 5.

McLane was in the box for Fordham, and was hit hard in the early part of the game, but later settled down and pitched well. Drennan, Georgetown's southpaw, was effective for four innings, but after that the Fordham solved his delivery. Score by innings:

	R.	H.	E.
Fordham	0	0	0	1	0	2	0	2	—6	7	3
Georgetown	1	0	0	0	2	0	0	1	—5	12	6

BASEBALL PATRONS AROUSED.

Will Send Big Petition to Boston to Help Manager McGraw.

When the Directors of the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs meet in Boston on Thursday to consider the charge preferred by Barney Dreyfuss, President of the Pittsburg Club, against Manager John J. McGraw of the New York team, to the effect that McGraw accused Dreyfuss of having control of the umpires, they will be presented with a petition, signed by probably five thousand admirers of the National League champions, many of whom have been patrons of the National game for years, in which it is contended that the game as played at the Polo Grounds has always been "clean," without any appearance of rowdyism, and the members of the champion New York team are a credit to the sport. It is further contended that Manager McGraw never made the insulting remarks to President Dreyfuss, as he charges, and convincing proof will be presented to corroborate this statement.

The petition also states that the punishment inflicted on Manager McGraw by President Pulliam was undeserved, as it can be proved without the semblance of a doubt that the remarks attributed to Manager McGraw on Friday, May 19, applying to President Dreyfuss, and for which he was fined $160 and suspended for fifteen days, were not uttered.

The petition further states that, in the event of the New York Club being unduly punished in Boston efforts will be made to keep New York's support away from the Pittsburg Club upon its appearance in this city.

Among the many signers of the petition yesterday were John Whalen, ex-Corporation Counsel; Senator John W. Grady, Leopold Wasser, Louis Mann, Fred M. Mayer, Sam Mikell, Samuel Mann, William Walters, William Theobald, Amy Lesser, and Richard Schell.

VAUGHAN BEHIND RECORD.

Nails on Track Cause Tire Punctures in 1,000-Mile Auto Race.

Guy Vaughan started at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon on the Empire City track, near Yonkers, in an effort to break the existing 1,000-mile record, held by Charles Wridgway, of 25 hours 50 minutes. Over 500 persons were present to witness the start, but before Vaughan had gone many miles he was forced to stop on account of punctured tires. This happened so frequently that an investigation was set on foot, with the result that a quantity of nails was found strewn over the track, and before evening over five pounds of nails had been picked up. This caused Vaughan to lose much time, as he had to stop frequently to put on new tires.

NEW YORK HORSES WIN.

Mrs. Gerken, Judge Moore, and A. G. Vanderbilt Get Philadelphia Awards.

PHILADELPHIA, May 29.—Eben D. Jordon of Boston, Mrs. John Gerken and Judge William H. Moore of New York, and Alfred G. Vanderbilt of Newport were among the blue ribbon winners to-day at the opening of the horse show at the Philadelphia Country Club. Mr. Jordan won three firsts, among them being his four-in-hand team. Mrs. Gerken won with Newsboy in the single harness class. Mr. Vanderbilt's Polly Prim won in the class for horses shown before a dog cart, gig, or phaeton, and Judge Moore, with his brown pair, Bugler and Fife, took the blue ribbon in the class for harness pairs. The Cedar Court Stables of New York won first in the saddle class with the chestnut mare Elsa.

FINANCIAL.

TO ALL HOLDERS OF PREFERRED STOCK AND OF COMMON STOCK OF

Rubber Goods Mfg. Co.

Office of
CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK,
54 Wall Street, New York.

Pursuant to arrangements made by a Syndicate for the exchange of shares of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company for shares of the United States Rubber Company, the undersigned gives notice that in behalf of such Syndicate the Central Trust Company of New York is prepared to receive the deposit of certificates for any shares of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company for the purpose of such exchange on the following basis:

For each $100 par value of the Preferred Stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, $100 par value of the 8% non-cumulative First Preferred Stock of the United States Rubber Company.

For each $100 par value of the Common Stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, $50 par value of the 6% non-cumulative Second Preferred Stock of the United States Rubber Company.

Such preferred stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company must carry all dividends and rights to dividends declared or payable after July 1, 1905.

Dividends on the preferred stocks of the United States Rubber Company to be delivered to depositors, are to begin to accrue from July 1, 1905.

Arrangements have already been made for the acquisition of a very large proportion of the stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company.

The offer herein made for stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company is conditional upon the deposit and sale hereunder of at least two-thirds in amount of all outstanding shares of the capital stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company.

Certificates for stocks of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company must be deposited with the Central Trust Company of New York, as depositary, as stated below, in exchange for its transferable receipts.

The deposited certificates must be accompanied by suitable assignments and powers of attorney, in blank, duly executed, and having attached thereto, if required, suitable assignments or transfers of all dividends and rights to dividends, as above stated. Every deposit must be made upon the following further terms and conditions.

(1.) The undersigned shall have power to deliver the deposited certificates to the United States Rubber Company; but until so delivered the undersigned shall have full control over such certificates. The transfer and delivery to the United States Rubber Company of the deposited shares of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company may be completed whenever the undersigned shall deem that a sufficient amount of such stock shall have been deposited.

(2.) The certificates for shares of the United States Rubber Company deliverable to depositors shall be delivered at the office of the Central Trust Company of New York, in the City of New York, after public advertisement by the undersigned made in at least two newspapers in the City of New York. Such certificates may be issued in the names of the respective holders of the receipts entitled thereto, or may be issued in such other names as the undersigned may select, in which event they shall be endorsed for transfer in blank at the time of delivery. Every depositor agrees to accept in full payment and exchange for his deposited stock certificates for shares in the capital stock of the United States Rubber Company to be delivered at the rates above specified, in respect of the stock by him so deposited. At the option of the undersigned, temporary certificates for such shares may be delivered, pending the preparation and delivery of engraved certificates.

The United States Rubber Company has issued and has now outstanding 235,255 shares of preferred stock and 250,000 shares of common stock. Under resolutions of its Board of Directors at the meeting thereof held May 12, 1905, which action was ratified by resolutions of the stockholders in special meeting assembled upon May 25, 1905, the preferred stock is to be changed into a First Preferred Stock and is to be increased to 400,000 shares, of which 90,514 shares will be issuable in exchange for an equal amount of shares of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, and the remaining First Preferred Stock will be reserved for future requirements of the United States Rubber Company. By the same resolutions there has been authorized an issue of 100,000 shares of a Second Preferred Stock of the United States Rubber Company, all of which will be issuable to the aforesaid Syndicate under a contract (with the United States Rubber Company, of which a copy is on file with the Central Trust Company of New York, and to which reference hereby is made,) providing for the offer by the Syndicate of one share of such Second Preferred Stock of the United States Rubber Company for every two shares of the common stock of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company. To the extent that the Syndicate shall not be entitled to such Second Preferred Stock under said contract, such Second Preferred Stock will be held by the United States Rubber Company for its future corporate requirements. It is the intention of the United States Rubber Company to make application to the New York Stock Exchange for the listing of all new stock.

(3) The Central Trust Company of New York may make all such rules as it shall deem expedient covering the transfer and registration of receipts for deposited shares and for the closing of the transfer books for such receipts for any purpose.

(4) At any time before the stocks of the United States Rubber Company actually shall have been issued and delivered in exchange for stocks of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company deposited hereunder, this offer may be revoked; and in such case no act or notice of revocation shall be required other than an advertisement thereof at least once in each of two daily newspapers in the City of New York. In the event of any such revocation, the deposited stocks then remaining unexchanged shall be returned without charge upon surrender of the respective receipts issued therefor, and the depositors and receipt holders respectively shall have no claim against the United States Rubber Company or the Syndicate or against the undersigned.

Deposits must be made at the office of the Central Trust Company of New York, 54 Wall Street, New York City, on or before the 15th day of June, 1905. After that date no deposit will be received except in the discretion of the undersigned, and on such terms as the undersigned may prescribe.

The right is reserved to the undersigned to terminate the privilege of deposit hereunder at an earlier date upon two days' notice, to be given by publication at least once in each of two daily newspapers in the City of New York.

*Increase.

Although a good strong opening was to be seen in the New York market our local shares were featureless, with the tone, where any was to be seen, rather heavy except for one or two specialties. Commission houses had more selling orders this morning and few buying were in sight. Traders waited for the market to start one way or the other before taking their position. During the last half hour a better demand sprang up, and prices advanced somewhat, but commission houses took a small part in the activity. The closing was active and strong for specialties. CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 29.—New York exchange to-day was 10c. premium. Time and call loans, 3½@4½ per cent.

Chicago Subway stock led all transactions on the local Exchange in point of both activity and price advance. The pool work forecast Saturday through tipping agencies both here and in New York were carried forward. About 1,500 shares changed hands before the first call, and the price was lifted to the new high record of 65¾. Brokers who have acted for insiders from the start of the movement executed most of the orders to-day.

Other securities were very dull. Kansas City Light common was handled by Armour brokers at 41, a new high price. In the afternoon there was some trading in Tool bonds from 73½ up to 74¼, and down to 73. Biscuit common sold up to 51¾. The list follows:

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Strong; Call Money Easy, 1½@2¼ Per Cent.

The Japanese Victory and the Franchise Tax Decision Not Followed by a Runaway Market.

Whether or not yesterday's market was disappointing obviously depends upon what was or ought to have been expected. The facts are that important and long-awaited news was not followed by unmeasured enthusiasm. The many and good reasons why this was so does not annul the fact that. Japanese bonds excepted, stocks affected by a consideration so very local as the franchise tax decision were among the strongest. The general market experienced no great stimulus, and what stimulus was felt was expended quickly. The earliest news of the "historic events" in Tsushima Straits came via Washington, but was felt first in London's markets. Whether or not this buying was of American origin, as some thought, certain it is that when London's demands were satisfied there was no fresh stimulus here. And when London began to receive and transmit details to us neither London nor New York developed any fresh appetite proportioned to the dimensions of Japan's expanding victory. The market retained its strength pretty well, but its activity lessened with the progress of the hours until the last. The final business was almost as active as the opening, and the last prices ruled the best, but the volume was only a half million shares, and the rise averaged little over one point. The chief activity was in the bond market, with enormous business in the Japanese issues. Together they contributed over $5,000,000 to the day's total of $6,547,000, with activity and strength most marked in the 4½'s.

This was familiar experience. In a purely speculative sense it was correct to buy the franchise properties upon the disclosure of the worst news that was possible regarding them. It had been expected, was more or less prepared for, and all that remains is a question of what offsets may be set up, and with what success. These properties are now in position to respond to good news which has been checked in its good effect by a factor whose force is exhausted. It also is mere repetition of experience that war news does not expend its stimulating effect at once. It requires time for the news to spread and be acted upon, and, as in the case of the franchise tax, there are offsets difficult of estimation off-hand. It was so after the Boer war, even the actual declaration of peace—a stage still distant in this case—being disappointing in its instantaneous operation upon the markets. This was especially the case yesterday, for it was a market between two holidays, with many absent, and those on hand left to themselves. There was profit-taking by those who had anticipated the events, and the bears proved as hard to defeat finally as the Russians. Those who have not placed emphasis upon the war naturally attach greater importance to the unchanged domestic situation—the doubt regarding the crops, the obscure legislative outlook, the hesitation in the iron trade. For those who have placed chief importance in such home affairs the war news obviously is not convincing to their market judgment. This was well enough yesterday, but their position might become suddenly uncomfortable if President Roosevelt should express his sympathetic desire to promote the cessation of Russia's sacrifices, and if Russia should accept his good offices. The prospect for the news to be accumulated over to-day's holiday is different from that over Sunday.

PROTESTS ON TRANSFER TAX.

Blanks Supplied to Brokers in Expectation of a Legal Test.

Notices were sent out yesterday by the Stock Exchange to all the members, notifying them that the Exchange had prepared a blank form for those who wished to protest against the payment of the transfer tax, which goes into effect next Friday. It was assumed that all Stock Exchange houses would put these protests on file with State Controller Kelsey, in order to be in a position to claim a refund of the tax if the law is declared void. It is expected that steps will be taken to test the constitutionality of the measure, but it has not yet been announced just what it is proposed to do in this direction.

One effect of the transfer tax expected by some traders is that it will result in a considerable increase of the trading in the speculative bonds. The tax is imposed upon transfers of stocks, but not on bonds, and it is thought that the saving of the tax will be a sufficient inducement to make a good many traders transfer their dealings from stocks to such bonds as Union Pacific convertibles, the Tobacco bonds, and numerous other issues which have a very wide market.

"BIG FOUR'S" NEW STOCK.

Preferred Stockholders to be Admitted to Subscription.

The Directors of the "Big Four," as the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad is commonly known, at a meeting yesterday in the Grand Central Station voted to request the stockholders at their meeting in Cincinnati to-day to make the forthcoming issue of common available for subscription by the preferred stockholders, as well as by the common stockholders as originally contemplated.

The common stock of the "Big Four" is to be increased from $28,700,000 to $40,000,000 for the purpose of additions and improvements under authorization given a few weeks ago.

NEW K. C. SOUTHERN HEAD.

J. A. Edson Chosen President—Untermyer General Counsel.

The Directors of the Kansas City Southern Railroad yesterday elected J. A. Edson, formerly general manager of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton, President of the company. Herman Sielcken, H. R. Duval, D. G. Boissevain, Ernst Thalmann, and Samuel Untermyer were chosen as an executive committee and Samuel Untermyer was appointed general counsel for the road.

The committee will hold another meeting later this week at which the general policy of the road will be considered.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Japanese Victory Felt, but Approaching Holiday Also Has Effect.

American stocks in London yesterday before the opening of the market here responded to the news of the great Japanese victory by a sharp advance that influenced the New York opening and caused strength throughout the list. London bought here to the extent of about 40,000 shares, and this buying was largely responsible for the good start. After arbitrage transactions ceased for the day the market quieted down considerably, and was not active again until just before the close. During the noon hour the trading amounted to only 26,000 shares. It was evident that the market was feeling the effect of the approaching holiday despite the stirring news of Togo's victory over the Russian fleet.

Tractions Held Up.

In the early trading the tractions were strong with the rest of the list, and by noon they had reacted with the general market, but after the announcement of the decision of the Supreme Court in the franchise tax case they not only lost no ground, but without exception made substantial gains. Brooklyn Rapid Transit was the leader of the group. It was surmised that in this issue, and to a less extent in the others as well, insiders had prepared to support the stock in the event of the decision being made the basis of a bear attack, and when this attack did not materialize decided to make a move against the short interest, succeeding well enough to bring about a net gain of 2½ points in Brooklyn Rapid Transit, 1⅛ in Metropolitan Street Railway, and 1⅞ in Metropolitan Securities. The announcement that the decision was against the corporations was no surprise to the insiders, or, for that matter, to Wall Street in general.

U. P. and S. P. Strong.

Wall Street just now is full of bulls on Union and Southern Pacific. Both stocks were strong yesterday in greater degree than most other issues in the list. Union Pacific, moreover, was the most active stock in the list, showing a total almost double that in Steel common, which was second. An increased dividend on Union Pacific is being looked for with more and more confidence, especially since the announcement of re-established harmony in the Northwest. But in addition to an increase in the regular dividend rate rumor had it yesterday that plans were being considered for the granting of "rights" to the Union Pacific stock, in connection with the very large profits that the Union Pacific has made through its investment of four years ago in Northern Pacific.

Sugar Holds Advance.

On trading in about 6,000 shares, American Sugar rose 3½ points, and it lost none of its gain. In this as in a number of other issues the cause of the advance was attributed to an outstanding short interest that was impelled to cover by the generally firm tone of the market and because of the belief that the market on Wednesday, after the holiday, was likely to reflect more fully than it did to-day the influence of the Japanese victory. Some who have been bears for a good while are now inclined to grant that, barring accidents such as unusual damage to the crops or some similar disappointing occurrence, the market should advance to a higher level.

JAPAN MAY TAKE GOLD.

Large Transfers of Money to San Francisco May Be to Provide Gold for the Orient.

Permission was secured by New York bankers from the Treasury Department yesterday to transfer $3,000,000 through the Sub-Treasury to San Francisco, and late in the day that amount was sent to the Pacific Coast. It was not stated for what purpose this unusually large transfer was made, and in the absence of information on this point it was surmised in some quarters that the transfer was made for the purpose of securing gold in San Francisco to be shipped to Japan. It was recalled that when last year's shipments of gold to Japan were made much secrecy was maintained in regard to the shipments, and it was thought yesterday that other shipments might be in contemplation now. It is known that large amounts have recently been transmitted to London for Japanese account out of the proceeds of the recent $75,000,000 bond issue, and these remittances, it was thought yesterday, were perhaps to be augmented by shipments of gold to Japan out of the proceeds of the same loan. The point was made that the large credits which Japan has established abroad might incline her to replenish to some extent her gold supply, which has been much reduced by the gold exported from the country since the beginning of the war. At the office of the agency of the Yokohama Specie Bank in this city it was said yesterday that no knowledge was had there of any intended gold shipments to Japan, but similar statements were made at the time the last gold exports to that country were in progress, the explanation at that time being that the gold was being sent through other channels.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, May 29.—Money was in fair supply and increased demand in the market to-day in connection with the payment of various important calls.

The tone on the Stock Exchange generally was buoyant. The war news relieved the dealers' pent-up feelings, though the settlement restricted dealings. Consols led a strong upward movement and home rails rose rapidly.

Americans opened irregular and hardened with other sections. Union Pacific and New York, Ontario and Western were the features, and United States Steel was in good demand. A moderate amount of business was transacted and prices generally closed firm. Grand Trunk was firmer on the April statement.

Japanese improved perceptibly. Imperial Japanese Government sixes of 1904 were quoted at 102¾. Russians relapsed.

The failure was announced of the Economic Bank on Bishopsgate Street, a small concern of no importance.

Bar Silver dull; 27 1-16d per ounce.

Money, 1½@1¾ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2⅛ per cent.; for three months' bills, 2⅛ per cent.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 31.80; Lisbon, 8.50.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £36,000.

LONDON CLOSING QUOTATIONS.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, May 29.—Prices on the Bourse to-day opened firm. The announcement of the Japanese naval success exercised a favorable influence on stocks with the exception of Russians, which declined slightly. The market closed firm. Russian Imperial fours were quoted at 88.70, and Russian bonds of 1904 at 501.00.

Three per cent. rentes, 90 francs 70 centimes for the account. Exchange on London, 25 francs 18½ centimes for checks.

BERLIN, May 29.—Prices on the Boerse to-day generally were somewhat higher owing to London advices and hopes of peace in the Far East. Russians were 4-10 per cent. lower.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 49¼ pfennigs for checks.

Discount rates—Short bills, 3¼ per cent; three months' bills, 2¼ per cent.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 29.—United Railways' incomes have stiffened on the talk of refunding this issue in a new financial plan. At the request of a number of holders of securities the Continental Trust Company remained open until a late hour this afternoon to receive deposits under the plan for merging the Mount Vernon-Woodbury Cotton Duck Company and the United States Cotton Duck Corporation. Deposits to-day were heavy, and it was stated that a very large majority of each security concerned in the plan had been received. The committee in charge of the plan extended the time for depositing the securities to June 8.

With the exception of an advance of ⅝ of a point in Northern Central stock price changes to-day were small. The market was not active and the closing dull but firm.

Transactions were 1,534 shares, bonds $56,200, as follows:

Free Transportation.

It Remains to be Seen

GRANTWOOD

Year in and year out for nearly 5 years this sign has illumined the Palisades and been viewed by thousands. It accurately marks the location of

GRANTWOOD-ON-HUDSON
(OPPOSITE GRANT'S TOMB)
ON THE VERY EDGE OF THE PALISADES,

overlooking the Hudson, New York City, the Sound and Long Island. 270 feet above high tide insures perfect drainage and climate of the Catskills. The demand for homes is greater this season than ever before. Our supply is limited, but we still have some beautiful houses from $5,000 to $15,000, equal in comfort to a city home and better located.

Booklet free, also transportation. Take Franklin, 42d or 130th St. Ferry and Trolley.

GO TO MORSEMERE and you'll never think of going elsewhere. We have been quietly developing it for two years and can now show a veritable garden spot, with many unusually handsome residences ready for sale ON MOST LIBERAL TERMS.

A $20,000 railway station (erected by us) and park indicate character of improvements. THE NEW TROLLEY LINE IS NOW OPEN, GIVING QUICK SERVICE BETWEEN CITY AND COUNTRY. In twenty minutes from ferryhouse at 130th St. you can enjoy the beauties of the Hackensack Valley with the Orange Mountains in the background.

This new line means a tremendous demand for MORSEMERE lots. Here is your opportunity to live in the country, WITH FINE FISHING AND BOATING at hand, and yet be within half an hour's ride of the city. Rapid transit connections with Subway at Manhattan St. (125th St.)

Excellent train service, 35 minutes from Chambers or 23d St.

LONG ISLAND. FOR SALE.

BAY SIDE PARK

Bay Side, Long Island

10 MILES FROM CITY HALL, NEW YORK

On the North Shore Branch of the Long Island Railroad

THE property is surrounded by handsome country estates. It comprises the highest land and most desirable residential sites on Long Island. The Long Island Railroad is now establishing a system of electric motive power, which will shorten the distance in time between Bay Side Park and Manhattan to 45 minutes, and it will increase the number of trains each day, which is now 54. The new Pennsylvania Railroad tunnel will land Bay Side passengers in the heart of Manhattan. The East River Bridge across Blackwell Island will also shorten the distance from Bay Side Park.

There is a tremendous growing demand for residential property in the Bay Side section at present. In a few years, the buying by family investors promises to create a great boom with all the accompanying phenomena of rising land prices and record-breaking building operations.

MAYBE MY LAST REMARKS ABOUT EASTWOOD.

JAMAICA, N. Y. CITY.

Reason Why? Well, it is selling so rapidly, and satisfied purchasers are such good advertising agents for me that I won't need much more newspaper publicity. Still, I have some beautiful sites left. Prices are low, and terms of payment the easiest imaginable.

Now, won't you (just to satisfy yourself that the celebrity of EASTWOOD is justified as the finest residential property in the City) go down to Jamaica to look at it?

You will find beautiful macadam roads, under which are sewers, water and gas. There are also artistic cement walks and curbs, and all the marks of a high-class exclusive neighborhood.

I can sell you a just finished EASTWOOD house, too, for $5,500 and one for $5,000 that will be ready soon. Also one a little cheaper.

PALISADE THE MODEL SUBURB

JUST ACROSS THE HUDSON VIA 130TH ST. FERRY.

HOME TALK NO. 7.

One-tenth the yearly rental of your house is its value. At the end of ten years your landlord still owns the house and you have nothing—worse than nothing—you have receipts for a mass of money that would have bought the house, and their contemplation will illustrate your lack of foresight. Deep down in the heart of every man is a desire to own his home. An opportunity awaits you at Palisade. Write us.

HOUSE NO. 14.

Stucco and half timbered, all toned in brown.

From a vestibule inclosed on three sides with leaded glass bearing a design in delicate colors you enter a timbered ceiling living room that takes up the entire front of the house, at the end of which will be an immense fireplace. There are ten rooms and three baths. Every convenience imaginable. Grounds, 65x115. Terms to suit.

Houses Range in Price from $10,000 to $30,000—Some a Trifle Less. An illustrated descriptive book is yours for the asking.

ORDERS FULL RANK INSIGNIA.

McAdoo Says Acting Officers Must Buy New Uniforms.

Police Commissioner McAdoo yesterday issued a general order that all Acting Captains and Acting Inspectors must procure at once uniforms indicative of the rank in which they are acting, as well as the insignia of that rank.

This will affect a number of men now holding acting positions. Acting Inspectors Stephen O'Brien and William Hogan will wear the velvet cuffs and gold badges of Inspectors, and will hereafter be called Inspector. Acting Captains Eggers, Bourke, Jacob Braun, John Hughes, and William McCoy will wear the uiforms of Captains, as will a number of Acting Captains in Brooklyn.

In reply to a suggestion that those holding temporary rank would believe that they were certain to receive permanent appointments, Commissioner McAdoo said that he will not appoint any one unless he has thorough confidence in his ability.

Rope and Twine Committees Unite.

The committee of the holders of the income bonds and stock and that representing the holders of the first mortgage bonds of the Standard Rope and Twine Company, at a meeting held yesterday afternoon, decided to consolidate for the reorganization of the company. This is expected to insure a reorganization that will be acceptable to all interests.

METROPOLITAN THREAT TO TRANSIT BOARD

McDonald Says Elevated Extension May Postpone Subways.

BRONX RESIDENTS ANXIOUS

Will Attend in Force Thursday's Hearing and Urge That Prompt Relief Be Provided.

Seeking to overcome the effect of the agitation in the Bronx in favor of having the Rapid Transit Commission grant permission to three-track the Second and Third Avenue elevated lines, John B. McDonald, acting in behalf of the Metropolitan Street Railway interests, yesterday issued a statement which was regarded by the Rapid Transit Commissioners as a threat to abandon certain of the proposed Subway routes should the commission grant to the Interborough Company the permission to lay aditional elevated tracks.

The statement, which Mr. McDonald issued through an employe, is as follows:

"John B. McDonald has indicated that the adoption of new elevated routes would seriously modify his proposals for building new tunnels which were based on the common understanding that no more elevated routes were to be laid out in New York City, and that the Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners was committed to the construction of municipally owned subways rather than to the improvement of private property owned in perpetuity.

"The adoption of new elevated routes on Second Avenue, Third Avenue, the Bowery, Park Row, and from Chatham Square to the Battery will, it is suggested, radically alter the aspect of the new Subway construction, and may in the end postpone indefinitely further transit improvements."

While the McDonald statement came as a surprise to the Rapid Transit Commissioners they had anticipated that the Metropolitan people would threaten alterations in their Subway bids if the elevated improvement were ordered. Last week Paul D. Cravath called on some of the Commissioners, in behalf of the Metropolitan, and said that the Metropolitan would seek only to construct a two-track Subway in Lexington and Third Avenues if the elevated improvement were made, thus refusing to bid for the construction and operation of express Subways in those streets.

Officials of the Interborough Company, on the other hand, have assured the Rapid Transit Commissioners that the improvement of the elevated tracks will not in any way affect their bids on the east side trunk line Subways as laid down by the Commission. The Rapid Transit Commissioners expect an important hearing on Thursday when, from advance indications, most of the civic organizations of the Bronx will be on hand to urge the improvement of the elevated structure as the only way to insure immediate rapid transit from City Hall to all parts of the Bronx. The North Side Board of Trade, the Taxpayers' Alliance, and the Associate Board of Real Estate Brokers, all will be represented in behalf of the third-track plan.

William Barclay Parsons, former Chief Engineer of the Rapid Transit Commission and the engineer who built the present Subway, yesterday came out strongly in favor of the three-track plan.

"I am opposed to any elevated lines on Manhattan Island on streets where they do not now exist," he said, "but when studying the problem for the Rapid Transit Board I realized that the elevated systems had certain responsibilities in the way of furnishing transit facilities that could not be overlooked, and which could not be met by any other lines.

"The proposed three-tracking of the Second and Third Avenue elevated lines is the outcome of a suggestion made by me when Chief Engineer of the board, when I really advocated the four-tracking of the Second Avenue line, in order to bring the residents of the Bronx and of Harlem down to City Hall by a fast service. Only by the construction of additional tracks on the elevated lines can an adequate service be given to the Bronx, and until this is done the conditions there rapidly will grow worse, if that be possible.

"To-day the Interborough lines in the Bronx are bringing to the Harlem River 80,000 passengers a day, and taking the same number northward. This is an increase of 36 per cent. over three years ago, and as the business lies entirely along Interborough roads, the passengers would not take any other means of transportation, and in fact could not without paying a double fare. When it is considered that it would take five years to complete the first of the proposed Bronx subways, and that the three-track plan could be put into operation with even better results in less than a year, all opposition should cease."

PRAISE FOR SUBWAY'S WORK.

Its Use Satisfactory, Chamber of Commerce Report Says.

Advance sheets of the forty-seventh annual report of the Chamber of Commerce were issued yesterday. The report starts with a reference to the rapid transit situation. "The completion of the greater part of the Subway and the demonstration afforded by its actual use," the report says, "have furnished matter of special satisfaction to the Chamber." Reference is then made to the services for rapid transit rendered by members of the Chamber and to the plan to honor those men with suitable medals and otherwise.

The report also recounts the work of the Chamber on the mortgage tax, international arbitration, and water supply questions.

WILL TIE UP SUBWAY GRANTS.

Grout's Plan for Testing Elsberg Laws Displeases Aldermen.

Subway construction will be tied up for many months to come and the city unable to let a valid franchise for a new tunnel, according to the views expressed yesterday by rapid transit officials in discussing the action of Gov. Higgins in signing the Elsberg bills, which take from the Board of Aldermen all powers over routes and franchises and lodge them with the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

When the Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners meets on Thursday Controller Grout will propose that, notwithstanding the Elsberg laws, on all rapid transit subway construction franchises—the board shall send the routes and plans to the Board of Aldermen for approval as well as to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. By this device, the Controller says, both boards would be committed to the measures and the subway franchises would be valid, no matter whether the courts later decide that the Aldermen or the Board of Estimate was the proper power to act.

This proposition is not received with enthusiasm by the Aldermen, whose powers were curtailed partly through the efforts of the Controller.

Alderman Doull, who is one of the majority leaders of the board, declared yesterday that the city would be unable to grant a valid franchise to any one until the courts have definitely decided the constitutionality of the Aldermanic act. He also said that Controller Grout was the last person on earth who had the right to even suggest any agreement or compromise with the Aldermen.

"The Board of Aldermen will take no such action to test the act," said he, "but at the proper time a taxpayers' suit will be begun. If all the parties holding franchises in the streets of New York had banded themselves together to prevent the granting of further franchises they could not have acted more effectively than by having passed the very bill which Gov. Higgins signed. There can be no rapid transit extensions until the courts definitely settle the matter."

PRIZES AT CHOIR SCHOOL.

Choristers at St. John's Cathedral Rewarded for Proficiency.

The annual distribution of prizes to the pupils of the Choir School of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine took place yesterday afternoon in the Synod Hall, on the cathedral grounds, One Hundred and Eleventh Street and Amsterdam Avenue, Bishop Greer presided.

The school, which has about twenty-five pupils, is exclusively for the education of the choristers of the cathedral, who, in consideration of their services, receive their education free. Attired in their gray uniforms, the boys made an excellent showing yesterday, and their drill work and tactics were praised by Capt. John A. Lockwood, United States Army. The boys rendered several selections, after which the Rev. Ernest Voorhis, precentor of the cathedral, who is headmaster of the school, gave medals, as follows: First prize in music, Samuel Burt Browne; second, Lawrence Marsham Cockaday; deportment, Roderic Marble Olzendam; first prize in scholarship, Harold L. Brown; second, Donald Elmore Dietz; gymnasium, first division prize, Howard Milton Potter; second division, George Harold Lawrence. For military drill, the officer's prize was awarded to Harry Cady Kimball. The prize for privates was won by Hubert Ernest Reeves. In behalf of the boys, Dr. Voorhis gave to Capt. Le Roy Van Antwerp Bird a handsome watch. At the close of the exercises refreshments were served.

AXE RAID AT WOOL EXCHANGE.

Police Break Into Alleged Poolroom Centre—Smash 20 Telephones.

Acting Captain Eggers yesterday went out with a band of hatchet-armed policemen and raided an alleged poolroom exchange in the Wool Exchange, in West Broadway. To get inside they smashed doors and windows. Inside they demolished twenty telephones and a switchboard, and then arrested ten men.

The raid was conducted over the head of the Captain of the Leonard Street Police Station. The moment the doors fell before the axes twenty men inside made frantic efforts to escape. Several, failing in this, tried to hide cards and sheets which the police say were racing charts. After some of the detectives tackled the men the rest attacked the telephones and the switchboard with the axes, and in a few minutes there was little left intact.

All the other occupants of the building were attracted to the conflict. It is said that many had the privilege of seeing Acting Captain Eggers plant his right fist in the left eye of one of the men afterward arrested. Before the men submitted the detectives had to show their revolvers.

The alleged proprietor of the place got away. The place, according to Eggers, was fitted up well enough to supply racing news to forty poolrooms.

ERIE HIRES A GRAPE EXPERT.

Will Encourage Growing in the Hammondsport District All It Can.

F. W. Gristock of Penn Yan, an expert in the handling and marketing of grapes, has been appointed commercial agent of the Erie Railroad, with headquarters at Hammondsport. When the Erie assumed control of the Bath and Hammondsport Railroad and the Lake Keuka Navigation Company it decided to develop the territory alike for the benefit of the company and the property owners along the line. Mr. Gristock will devote his entire time to directing the most economical handling and most profitable marketing of the grape crop, one of the most prolific of the small fruit crops of that region.

Warehouses for the handling of the crop are to be erected on the water front at Hammondsport with all necessary dockage facilities, as a central shipping point, for producers of the region. Mr. Gristock has been instructed to keep in touch with the markets and be able to advise growers as to the needs and conditions of the trade.

BRONX CARS 80 MIN. APART.

Union Co. Must Explain or Pay $50 for Each Offense, Grout Says.

Controller Grout has served notice on the Union Railway Company of the Bronx that, unless the company can show good reason to the contrary, the city will take action after June 5 to collect penalties because the company does not run its cars all night, according to the schedule in its franchise. Under the schedule cars were to be run every twenty minutes from 2 A. M. to 6 A. M., and at least every ten minutes the rest of the twenty-four hours. Henry P. Nichols, in charge of the city's franchise department, stationed Inspectors last week along the lines of the company to keep tab on the cars. They reported that on some of the lines cars were run only every eighty minutes, a single car being used between 2 A. M. and 5 A. M. The penalty is $50 for each violation of the franchise agreement. The Controller said yesterday that he intended to collect unless the road could give a good excuse.

TALE OF A MILD SHIPWRECK.

The Schooner Claremont's Crew Just Rowed Ashore When She Struck.

The crew of the little three-masted schooner Claremont of Rockland, Me., which was wrecked near Maracaibo on May 14, arrived here on the steamship Zulia yesterday morning, and made public the least exciting shipwreck narrated in these parts in years.

A stiff breeze and a strong tide drove the schooner into the mud and rocks off Maracaibo, where she pounded hard and began to break up. The crew abandoned her at once.

After a pleasant row of a few miles they reached the Harbor of Maracaibo, where they told their troubles to the American Consul, who forthwith engaged passage for them on the Zulia. The Claremont was thirty years old and registered 148 tons. She was built at Port Jefferson, L. I.

MILKMAN SENT TO JAIL.

Sold Not Milk but Swill, Says Justice After Hearing the Testimony.

For selling adulterated milk, Kassen Loudon of 124 Hudson Street, Hoboken, was fined $150 yesterday, in Special Sessions, and sent to the Tombs Prison for five days.

Sanitary Inspector Bulkley of the Health Department testified that when he examined the milk in Loudon's wagon he found it 10 per cent. adulterated and that 19 per cent. of the fat had been removed.

"That is not milk, but swill. He ought to be in prison," said Justice Zeller.

McAdoo Enlarges His Committee.

Police Commissioner McAdoo has decided to enlarge the committee which, he hopes, will aid him in making future appointments and promotions. Of the original five men asked to become members two accepted—Col. Dyer of the Twelfth Regiment and ex-Judge David McClure. Yesterday the Commissioner asked to assist him Francis Lynde Stetson, John G. Milburn, J. Bannon, John D. Crimmins, Herman Ridder, Charles Nasher, R. A. C. Smith, and Charles Stewart Smith.

KILBURN EXONERATED BY GOV. HIGGINS

Did Right in the Merchants' Trust Matter, He Says.

PRAISE FOR RUTLAND ASSETS

Expected to Pay Depositors in Full, Bank Superintendent Says—Lawyers See Mayer.

ALBANY, May 29.—Gov. Higgins to-day dismissed the charges made by George Von Utassy of New York City against Superintendent Kilburn of the State Banking Department for the failure of the latter to close the Merchants' Trust Company of New York City two years ago. The Governor took this action after the receipt from Superintendent Kilburn of a statement answering the charges. The Governor in dismissing the charges made this statement:

"Reading Superintendent Kilburn's statement in connection with the charges, and after consultation with the Attorney General and the counsel to the Governor on the legal questions involved, I have decided that the Superintendent of Banks acted in the matter in accordance with law, and exercised proper judgment and prudence in so doing. The charges against him are hereby dismissed."

Superintendent Kilburn's statement says that when he entered upon the task of having the company relieved of some of its loans and securities, that, in his opinion, was a much wiser course than an attempt at that time to put the company in the hands of a receiver. He said that an aggregate of $2,219,000 of loans had been retired, and that he also had the trust company relieved of a guarantee of $750,000, making a total of nearly $3,000,000.

At the time the report of examination was made to him, he said, there was not, in his opinion, sufficient ground to conclude that the company was insolvent, nor that its capital was impaired. He also said that if any step had been taken then to throw the company into a receivership its securities would have been sacrificed. He added:

"The slow assets consist at the present time in the main of bonds of the Hudson Valley Railway Company, and of certain power street railway and lighting companies in Rutland, Vt. These securities have substantial value, and it is expected that the receivers will ultimately obtain for them sufficient to pay depositors in full.

"The statute clothes me with discretion in determining when 'it is unsafe and inexpedient for such corporation * * * to continue business,' and the facts and results show that I have exercised my judgment and discretion wisely, and in the interests of the trust company and its depositors. Neither at the time of the examination, nor at any time since, have I had sufficient grounds, in my opinion, to report to the Attorney General that the company was insolvent."

Edward Lauterbach, counsel for the receivers of the Merchants' Trust Company, and Frank H. Platt, went to Albany yesterday and had a conference with Attorney General Mayer. They admitted that they discussed the trust company's affairs, but refused to disclose anything else as to their talk.

Although the outlook for the affairs of the Merchants' Trust Company assumed a distinctly brighter tinge yesterday, the report that there was a likelihood that the concern would be reorganized and resume business within the next few weeks was contradicted by a man who ought to know whereof he speaks in this matter.

The foundation for the talk of reorganization, which has been current for several days, was revealed when it was learned that a syndicate of bankers was considering a proposition made last week that they take over the various properties of the Trust Company and provide funds for the payment of the depositors. This plan was referred to an attorney, who advised against it so earnestly that it was rejected. It did not involve in any way the resumption of business by the company.

Otto Bannard, one of the receivers, said yesterday that it was still too early to say whether a call on the stock would be necessary to satisfy the claims of the depositors.

Mr. Bannard was notified yesterday of the appointment of James E. Sheffield and George W. Elkins to act as appraisers in the receivership.

TOOTHACHE HALTS FIREBUGS.

Men Who Intend to Rob Many Tenants Rob Sufferer Alone.

The tenants of the five-story tenement house at 404 Cherry Street congratulated themselves yesterday that Solomon Liebman, a furrier, who lives on the fourth floor, was suffering from toothache with insomnia as a complication when two strangers tried to set fire to the house yesterday morning.

Liebman, who has had a toothache for three nights and had tried nearly everything, except Christian Science and forceps, decided that he would stand it no longer. About 2 o'clock in the morning he got up, dressed, and started for a drug store for advice.

In the hallway he came upon two men, whom he describes as Italians, sprinkling oil on the hall carpet. They saw Liebman and immediately set upon him. One seized him and rolled him upon the rug while the other drew a knife and cut his pockets open. When Solomon had recovered, the Italians were gone; he was drenched with oil; he had lost a gold-plated watch and $150. Besides that, his clothes were tattered.

The other tenants of the house say that it was Liebman who saved their lives, as they firmly believe the strangers were going to set fire to the house, then loot the rooms. Solomon Liebman's toothache was cured by the shock of his adventure, but he is not glad. Now that it's cured he says he would rather have retained his watch and the $150.

Fifty Years a Jersey Justice.

New Jersey's oldest Justice of the Peace, John Hance, of Bloomsbury, completed his fiftieth year in that capacity yesterday. In the mails to-day he received his commission from Gov. Stokes for another five-year term.

WAS STARVING IN BROADWAY.

Whiting Watched Hoffman House Diners Till He Seemed Demented.

Looking through the windows of the Hoffman House dining room last night at 6 o'clock, a man whose papers said he was Daniel W. Whiting of Dudley, Mass., hungrily watched those who sat at the tables inside.

Presently he seated himself on a railing in front of one of the windows. He began to make motions with his hands, as if he were eating and wiping his mouth with a napkin. Occasionally he would say to an imaginary waiter: "Yes, waiter, a half dozen on the shell; let them be small, please"; or, "Waiter, you may bring me a tenderloin en casserole—no, I am partial to whole wheat bread."

Then he would laugh and talk about the war, lifting an imaginary glass to his lips now and then.

A crowd gathered to watch Whiting. He didn't notice them. Policeman Baxter forced his way through, and, seeing that the man was raving, he called an ambulance from Bellevue Hospital. Whiting will be examined there as to his sanity.

Dr. Gillespie said that Whiting was starving.

TAMMANY TO THE C. U.

Non-Partisan Co-operation Will Be Duly Considered—First Reply.

The Citizens' Union yesterday received from Tammany Hall a reply to the communication from the Union setting forth principles upon which it would welcome co-operation from other organizations in a non-partisan campaign. The letter was addressed to John J. Murphy, Secretary of the Citizens' Union, and was signed by J. Sergeant Cram, Chairman of the Tammany General Committee. Mr. Cram wrote as follows:

"I received your letter of May 23. The statement inclosed will, in due time, be laid before the Democratic General Committee."

The reply from Tammany was the first reply which has been received by Mr. Murphy to the 107 letters which the Union sent out to organizations.

Netherlands Minister Going Home.

Jonkheer R. de Marees van Swinderen, Minister of the Netherlands to the United States is among those booked to sail for Rotterdam on the Holland-America liner Noordam this morning. He will be accompanied by Mme. van Swinderen, and is going home on his annual vacation. On the Kronprinz Wilhelm, which also sails to-day, are booked Commodore and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry and the Misses Gerry, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Ogden, and Miss Ogden, Judge and Mrs. Alfred Steckler and Alfred Steckler, Jr., Mrs. Gustav H. Schwab, the Rev. Dr. Paul Hoelscher of Buffalo, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Weber.

Way Clear for Municipal Ferry.

Formal title was taken by the city yesterday to the land in Richmond and at the Whitehall Street ferry slip in Manhattan for the terminals for the municipal Staten Island Ferry. For many months disputes have hindered the progress of the work, but there is nothing now to hinder the Commissioner of Docks from awarding contracts.

TOO MUCH JAPANESE JOY.

Unfurled in front of a Japanese store at Broadway and Thirtieth Street is a great white flag with a huge red spot in the centre. Last night a white-haired old man stopped and looked up at it.

His right hand was thrust into the bosom of his Prince Albert coat; in his left was a late edition of an afternoon newspaper. Swelling out his chest and advancing his right foot, he delivered a dramatic oration in favor of "Old Toge" and in denunciation of "Roger Sinski." The reputation of "Roger Sinski" was burned to a crisp.

Then Policeman Smith arrested him for being intoxicated and collecting a crowd. The prisoner said at the Tenderloin Station that he was George Middleton, sixty-nine years old, no home, "a veteran actor, Sir, who has acted with Ned Booth and Mary Anderson."

THREE KILLED BY GAS.

The Bechles and Their Boarder, Fruehling, Found Dead by Neighbors.

Illuminating gas, which escaped from an open burner in a gas stove early yesterday morning, caused the death of John Bechle, a carpenter, of his wife, Emily, and of a boarder, Frederick Fruehling, at 422 Knickerbocker Avenue, Williamsburg. A fox terrier, whose barking early in the morning indicated that he had probably tried to raise an alarm, also succumbed to the gas fumes.

Bechle, his wife, and Fruehling attended an outing Sunday afternoon, and it was late at night when they reached their flat.

Just before noon yesterday a strong odor of gas attracted the, attention of tenants, and the door of the Bechle flat was forced. Ambulance Surgeon Moorehead expressed the opinion that the two men and woman had been dead at least nine hours.

ROJESTVENSKY IS TOGO'S PRISONER

The Czar's Admiral Found on a Destroyer.

NONE OF BIG SHIPS LEFT

All Chief Russian Vessels Sunk or Seized.

THREE ADMIRALS TAKEN

Captive Vessels Reach Japan--Japanese Lost None.

SUBMARINE BOATS USED?

Japanese Also Said to Have Employed Mines with Deadly Effect—Togo Regarded as a Demi-God.

Admiral Rojestvensky is a prisoner of the Japanese. Admiral Togo, in a report made public by the Japanese Legation in Washington, states that the Russian commander, badly wounded, was found on a captured destroyer, together with another Admiral who, it is evident, is Voelkersam. A third Russian Admiral, Nebogatoff, is also in the hands of the Japanese.

St. Petersburg yesterday sent out positive reports that Rojestvensky had been rescued by a Russian destroyer when his flagship went down and that he had reached Vladivostok. Late last night the explanation came. Admiral Dournovo had received a dispatch stating that the destroyer had picked up Rojestvensky and he had flown to the conclusion that the destroyer had arrived with the Admiral at Vladivostok. Togo's report shows that the destroyer was captured by the Japanese.

Of all Admiral Rojestvensky's battleships and cruisers, only one vessel, the small cruiser Almaz, is definitely known to have escaped destruction or capture. She has arrived at Vladivostok, at which port there have also arrived a Russian destroyer and a hospital ship.

According to the official Japanese reports the fate of only three of the other important Russian vessels is still uncertain. Every one of the battleships has been sunk or captured, together with all the cruisers with the exception of the Aurora, Oleg, and Izumrud. Each of these is a small, unarmored vessel.

According to the officers of the vessels which have reached Vladivostok Admiral Togo's fleet suffered heavily in the battle. They declare that they saw two Japanese battleships sink and that when last seen two of Togo's cruisers were about to founder. The officers admit, however, that they were far from the scene of the battle when they made their observations. On the other hand, they were close to the scene when they saw the Russian battleships Kniaz Souvaroff, Borodino, and Oslabya sink.

Togo's reports assert that not a single Japanese vessel was lost and that the casualties among the crews were comparatively slight.

That the Japanese are believed to have used submarines is asserted in a dispatch from Tokio.

In the Vladivostok dispatch there is a reference to the cruiser Rossia, which indicates that she did not leave port to co-operate with Rojestvensky.

TOGO REPORTS CLEAN SWEEP.

Every Russian Battleship Sunk or Captured—Rojestvensky Taken.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—The Japanese Legation to-night gave out the following cablegram from Tokio:

"FIFTH REPORT from Togo, received afternoon May 30:

"'The main force of our combined fleet, upon accepting surrender of the remaining Russian main force near Liancourt Rocks in the afternoon of May 28, as already reported, stopped pursuit, and while engaged in the disposition of surrendered ships found in a southwestern direction the Admiral Oushakoff, a coast-defense ship. Thereupon the Iwate and Yakumo (cruisers) were immediately dispatched in pursuit and invited her to surrender, but she refused, and was sunk at 6 P. M. Her crew of over 30 0men were rescued.

"'Cruiser Dmitri Donskoi was also found in the northwestern direction at 5 P. M., and was immediately overtaken and fired upon vigorously by our fourth division and second destroyer flotilla.

"'She was attacked that night by the second destroyer flotilla, and the next morning was found aground on the southeastern shore of Urleung Island, off the Korean coast.

"'Our destroyer Sazanami captured toward the evening of May 27 south of Urleung Island the Russian destroyer Bedovy, wherein were found Admiral Rojestvensky and another Admiral, both severely wounded, together with eighty Russians, including staff officers from the flagship Prince (Kniaz) Souvaroff, which was sunk at 5:29 P. M. on May 27. They were all taken prisoners.

"'Our cruiser Chitose, while cruising to the northward on the morning of May 28, found and sank another Russian destroyer.

"'Our cruiser Niyitaka/and destroyer Murakumo attacked at noon May 28 a Russian destroyer, which finally went aground.

"'According to various reports hitherto received and statements of prisoners the result of the battle from May 27 to May 29 is as follows:

"'Prince (Kniaz) Souvaroff, Alexander III., Borodino, Dmitri Donskoi, Admiral Nakhimoff, Vladimir Monomakh, Jemchug, Admiral Oushakoff, one converted cruiser, and two destroyers sunk.

"'Nikolai I., Orel, Admiral Apraxine, Admiral Seniavin, and destroyer Bedovy captured. According to the prisoners the Oslyabya sunk at 3 P. M. and the Navarin also was sunk.

"'Almaz on May 27 was observed in a disabled condition, but her final fate is yet unknown.

"'The full particulars regarding the injuries to our ships are not yet to hand, but so far as I could ascertain none was seriously injured, all being still engaged in operations.

"'The whole casualties are not yet ascertained. Casualties of First Division are little over four hundred. Prince Yorhito in excellent health, Admiral Misu slightly wounded May 27.'

"SIXTH REPORT, received the afternoon of May 30:

"'Loss of Oslyabya and Navarin confirmed. Sissoi Veliki also definitely reported to have sunk on the morning of May 29.'

"Official statement of Russian losses so far as ascertained:

"'Following six battleships sunk: Prince (Kniaz) Souvaroff, Imperator Alexander III., Borodino, Oslyabya, Sissoi Veliki, and Navarin.

"'Following five cruisers sunk: Admiral Nakhimoff, Dmitri Donskoi, Vladimir Monomakh, Svietlana, and Jemchug.

"'Coast-defense ship Admiral Oushakoff sunk.

"'Two special service ships, Kamchatka, and three destroyers also sunk.

"'Two battleships, Orel and Imperator Nikolai I.; two coast-defense ships, Admiral Apraxine and Admiral Seniavin, and one destroyer, Bedovy, captured.

"'Thus Russians lost altogether twenty-two ships, the aggregate tonnage amounting to 153,411, besides cruiser Almax, suspected to have sunk.'"

The State Department has received the following dispatch from Tokio, dated to-day:

"Admirals Rojestvensky, Voelkersham, and Nebogatoff all prisoners."

CAPTURED SHIPS REACH JAPAN.

People Regard Togo as a Demi-God—Few Details of Battle Yet.

TOKIO, May 30.—Admiral Togo has wired to Baron Yamamoto, Minister of the Navy, as follows:

"The main force of the Russian Second and Third Fleets is nearly annihilated. Please feel assured of it."

The captured Russian battleship Orel arrived at the Mizuru Navy Yard at noon to-day.

The battleship Nikolai I. and the coast-defense ironclads Admiral Seniavin and Admiral Apraxine reached Sasebo at 11 o'clock to-day. It is reported that the Orel and Nikolai I. are slightly damaged.

It is now believed that four Russian warships, in addition to those already reported lost, have been sunk by the Japanese fleet.

The Japanese people were confident of victory in the sea battle, but official confirmation of their belief and hope thrilled them as nothing else since the war began.

The long voyage of Admiral Rojestvensky, the equality on paper of the strength of the fleets, the irritation caused by the reported violations of neutrality, the apparent certainty that a formidable section of the Russian fleet would reach Vladivostok, and the vital bearing of the contest on the war and possibly on the future of the empire created an intense strain, which Togo's victory ends instantly.

The political effect of the battle and its influence upon commerce have already been felt.

At noon yesterday the Navy Department notified shipping men that the sea was free. There was a scene of wild enthusiasm on the Stock Exchange yesterday afternoon. Prices in some instances were the highest since the war began.

The Emperor, Princes, and Ministers are dispatching congratulations to Admiral Togo, who, it is expected, will receive high rank and other imperial honors. Already a popular idol, he has become a demigod in the popular estimation. It is also expected that Admirals Kamimura and Kataoka and other commanders will be honored.

Beyond the results little is as yet known here of the battle. Rojestvensky reached Quelpart Island early on Saturday and headed for the Tsu Islands. The exact number of vessels in his fleet is not clear, but he had his main fighting vessels with a number of light cruisers and transports. The disposition of the Japanese fleet appears to have been an ideal one.

Togo Waited for Weeks.

Admiral Togo had waited for weeks in the vicinity of the Tsu Islands, refusing to be lured away and to forfeit his advantage. The inner line was held by Togo with the battleships and Kamimura with the cruisers.

Kataoka with the light squadron first attacked Rojestvensky. According to one report Kamimura went outside the straits and prevented Rojestvensky's retreat. When Rojestvensky encountered Togo on Saturday afternoon there appears to have been a running fight to the northeastward. There was a series of desperate and successful torpedo attacks on Saturday night and a resumption of the battle on Sunday, Togo pressing the Russian fleet toward the southeastern coast of Korea.

Pending the conclusion of the Japanese pursuit it is impossible to tell the remaining strength of the Russians. A dispatch from Nagasaki dated 11 A. M. to-day said fighting continued off Okino Island.

The battle is regarded as the greatest modern naval fight. Practically all the information received has come in brief wireless messages.

Capt. Roshinoff, commander of the Russian armored cruiser Admiral Nakhimoff, and other survivors have been brought to Moji. The Admiral Nakhimoff was sunk near Tsu Islands on Saturday, seemingly by a mine or a submarine vessel.

Capt. Roshinoff says his vessel was entering the straits with the fleet. There was a tremendous explosion, and the Admiral Nakhimoff speedily sank, carrying the majority of her crew to death. Capt. Roshinoff reached a damaged steam launch and was picked up on Sunday. The other survivors used life belts and were rescued by fishermen.

Other prisoners and wounded are arriving at Sasebo. A number of Russian prisoners were landed on Tsu Island. Three hundred believed to be from the transport Ural have been landed on the Iwami coast.

How Russians Came Ashore.

A dispatch from Kobe says that hundreds of Russians, many of them badly wounded, are coming ashore at Yamaguchi (on the coast of Japan, opposite the Straits of Korea) in boats or clinging to wreckage.

A warrant officer of the Russian repair ship Kamchatka, who landed at Moji, says:

"Our fleet which entered the Strait of Korea numbered thirty-six vessels. The Kamchatka received several shots and was partly disabled. Finally a shot struck a vital part and sixty men entered boats. When they were nearly clear a great explosion occurred and the ship sank. The Captain and seven officers were killed in the battle. Two officers were wounded and two jumped overboard. Three other officers were drowned.

"We could see our battleships to the northward enveloped by the Japanese. Seemingly they were badly damaged."

It is impossible to determine the particular manner of the destruction of the other Russian ships. It is reported that submarine vessels and laid mines were used, but confirmation of this is not obtainable.

The Navy Department is silent on this point, but it is confidently believed that submarines were effectively used for the first time in history. Theoretically the sea was too rough for the employment of submarines on Saturday, but the Japanese sailors welcome desperate chances.

Foreign observers sharply criticise Rojestvensky and Nebogatoff, despite the meagreness of the knowledge of the conditions which governed them. Rojestvensky is criticised for not sending his light cruisers and transports by the northern straits, for his failure to arrange co-operation with the Vladivostok squadron, and for his battle formation, which consisted of all the strong ships in the starboard column and the weaker craft in the port column.

The courage of Nebogatoff, who surrendered on Sunday apparently without a fight, is questioned, although it is admitted that his ships were evidently badly battered on Saturday.

REACH VLADIVOSTOK AND TELL OF BATTLE

Cruiser Almaz and Destroyer Grozny Escape.

HOW THE FLAGSHIP WENT DOWN

Russian Officer Says It Trembled as If Struck by a Torpedo and Then Sank.

VLADIVOSTOK, May 30, 4:30 P. M.—Two ships alone of Vice Admiral Rojestvensky's powerful fleet, the swift cruiser Almaz and the torpedo-boat destroyer Grozny, lie at anchor here today in the curving harbor of Golden Horn. They separated from the fleet in the early stage of the battle which began in Korea Strait on Saturday and headed, in obedience to orders, at full speed for Vladivostok.

Up to 4 o'clock this afternoon no other vessel of the Baltic Fleet had arrived, and the signal stations on Askold and Rimskykorsakoff Islands reported none in sight.

Officers of the Almaz and Grozny say that both fleets had already sustained terrible losses when the two vessels broke through the hostile line. Of the Japanese, two battleships had gone down before their eyes, and two cruisers, their sterns high out of the water, seemed ready to plunge to the bottom of the sea.

The Russian fleet, they say, was in even sadder plight. Rojestvensky's flagship, the Kniaz Souvaroff; her sister ship, the Borodino, and the cruisers Oslyabya and Ural (?) were utterly destroyed, and when the fog closed down and hid the scene of battle from sight a third great Russian battleship, the Alexander III., seemed in sore distress. She was limping northward, putting up a valiant fight against throngs of torpedo boats. Japanese torpedo craft were clinging round the other ships of the Russian fleet like angered wasps, separate flotillas darting in again and again to launch their weapons.

The Almaz, which arrived here last evening, bears scars of the battle. Her mizzenmast is shot away and one of her smokestacks is pierced by a cannon shot. But the Grozny, though engaged for several hours in a running fight at short range with a Japanese destroyer, shows no signs of the fray. After her commander, Capt. Andriffski, had been wounded and an officer and three men had been killed, the Grozny succeeded in sinking her opponent with a luckily placed shot, and reached Vladivostok without further adventure at 11 o'clock this morning.

For two days Vladivostok had been buzzing with rumor and excitement. The fact that a battle between the rival fleets was imminent, if Rojestvensky was not already at hand-grips with Togo, was made known through the telegrams from Europe, and when it was learned yesterday that a Russian cruiser had been sighted off Askold Island, headed for the harbor, the city was filled with the wildest reports of every nature.

The inhabitants clustered in the streets, thronged the waterside, or climbed the frowning hills overlooking the harbor for a better view. Finally, toward 6 o'clock in the evening, a graceful cruiser with two snowy white stacks shot into view at the entrance to the Golden Horn and rounded to an anchorage beneath the bristling guns of the curving promontory. From afar the broken stump of her mizzenmast and a shothole showing black upon the white paint of one stack indicated that the cruiser had encountered the Japanese.

As the anchor chain rattled in the hawserholes the vessel wreathed itself in smoke. It was an Admiral's salute in honor of Rear Admiral von Jessen. Scarcely had the boom of the cannon begun to echo from the surrounding hills when von Jessen's flagship, the cruiser Rossia, answered the salute, and a minute later the guns of the fortress took up the cannonade.

Excitement beyond description seized the spectators, who with frantic "hurrahs" tossed high their caps. Citizens embraced each other, and danced jubilantly upon the pier, while the crews of the ships in the harbor joined in wild cheering.

In a trice boats were dropped from davits, and in a moment the officers of the cruisers and torpedo boats in the harbor and the military officials from the fortress were swarming on board the Almaz to learn news of the fight.

The story was short. According to the officers of the Almaz the fleet under Rojestvensky met the Japanese in the Strait of Korea near Tsu Island, and the opposing fleets immediately closed in. Being lightly armored, the Almaz, as had been ordered by Admiral Rojestvensky before the battle, separated itself from the main fleet at the first opportunity and headed for Vladivostok, but not too soon to observe that the losses on both sides in the titanic combat was great.

Early in the battle an officer of the Almaz, while watching Rojestvensky's flagship, the battleship Kniaz Souvaroff, for a signal, saw the flagship shudder from stem to stern as if under a blow from a gigantic hammer and hesitate in her course, while the waves rose high from her armored sides. Then she commenced to list and sink.

The officers believe that a submarine, or perhaps a large mine, caused the disaster to the Kniaz Souvaroff. From whatever cause, the damage was so extensive that the flagship soon went down, leaving the deck officers and many of the crew struggling in the waves.

One of the Russian torpedo boats, either the destroyer Buiny or the Bravi, ran in and picked up a number of the swimmers, one of whom was recognized through a glass as Admiral Rojestvensky.

Under a grueling attack by the Japanese warships, aided by torpedo boats, mines, and submarines, the Borodino, Osiyabya, and Ural were placed out of action and followed the flagship to the bottom.

The fog, which had raised and lowered intermittently during the morning, now began to settle down again, and the distance of the Almaz, which had succeeded in disengaging herself from the struggling ships, made it difficult for those on her to see clearly, but the officers are positive that they saw two Japanese battleships disappear beneath the sea before their eyes and that two Japanese cruisers appeared on the point of sinking.

The arrival of the Grozny to-day was marked by the same scenes of excitement as those which characterized the advent of the Almaz.

The correspondent of The Associated Press visited the wounded commander of the destroyer, Capt. Andriffski, at the hospital and the Captain confirmed the details given by the officers of the Almaz. He described his combat as a running fight in which the Grozny was engaged for several hours, finally sinking the pursuing Japanese destroyer.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 30.—The Russian hospital ship Orel, which was with Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet, has arrived at Vladivostok.

NAGASAKI, May 30.—11 A. M.—Three Russian war vessels were seen and reported by the Occidental and Oriental Company's steamer Doric, which has arrived here. They were the Izumrud, a cruiser of the Aurora class, and a gunboat, probably the Kazarsky. The last named was leaking.

The British steamer Athenian reports that on the afternoon of May 28 she passed a Russian converted cruiser proceeding in the direction of Shanghai.

CANNOT EXPLAIN DISASTER.

European Press Unable to Account for Russian Fleet's Collapse.

LONDON, Wednesday, May 31.—Every successive dispatch adds to the completeness of the Russian disaster, and the European press is busily casting about for an explanation of the extraordinary collapse of Rojestvensky's fleet.

There had been rumors of insubordination and mutiny on board the Russian vessels, though nothing authentic was known. It is suggested that submarines may have been employed, and that the mere appearance of them may have inspired terror among the Russian sailors.

It is also surmised by some of the papers that the need of enormous stores of coal necessitated the limitation of supplies of ammunition and, the ammunition giving out, the Russians were compelled to surrender.

Whether any or none of these reasons can be held accountable for the defeat, it is taken for granted that the difference in the morale of the Russians and Japanese was the most important factor in the result.

THOUGHT ROJESTVENSKY SAFE.

How Admiral Dournovo Gave Out False Report.

ST. PETERSBURG, Wednesday, May 31.—The report sent out yesterday afternoon of the arrival at Vladivostok of the Russian destroyer Buiny, with Admiral Rojestvensky on board, was due to a misunderstanding on the part of Admiral Dournovo, father of the commander of the Buiny.

The Admiral received a telegram telling him that the Buiny had followed the cruiser Almas out of the battle, and supposed that the destroyer, like the cruiser, had reached Vladivostok. He sent a telegram to the Grand Duke Alexis to that effect.

ADMIRAL SKRYDLOFF LOST.

Vladivostok Cruiser Gromobol Reported Sunk by Mine.

LONDON, Wednesday, May 31.—The Tokio correspondent of The Daily Express reports that the cruiser Gromobol of the Vladivostok squadron, with nearly 800 men on board, issued from Vladivostok in the hope of joining the remnant of Rojestvensky's fleet, and that it struck a Japanese mine and sunk with all hands.

The correspondent says it is believed that Vice Admiral Skrydloff was on board the Gromobol.

Admiral Skrydloff succeeded the late Admiral Makaroff as commander-in-chief of the Russian naval forces in the Far East. He was regarded as the hope of the Russian fleet, bold, well equipped in technical knowledge, and an experienced sailor. He was known as the "bull dog of the Russian Navy."

After reaching Vladivostok Skrydloff did little to justify his reputation, but this was supposed to be due to the fact that he had practically nothing to command. He had the three big Vladivostok cruisers and a few torpedo craft, but his squadron was not powerful enough for anything but occasional raids.

He went out several times and sank various Japanese merchant ships, but at length Admiral Kamimura caught him, sank one of his vessels, and badly damaged the others. Since then little has been heard of him.

OYAMA WAITS ON TOGO.

Land Battle Likely to Follow the Victory on Sea.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE RUSSIAN ARMY, GODZYADANI, Manchuria, May 30.—The army is waiting with intense expectancy news of the outcome of the naval battle, which, it is realized, will be the signal for the opening of a land combat.

Everything indicates that the Japanese are ready to strike a blow, and are only waiting in case the issue at sea is decided unfavorably to them.

Following their former tactics, the Japanese are massing heavy artillery at their centre in order to liberate a main striking force for action on the flanks.

A brisk south wind is rapidly drying the roads, but the barometer is very low.

Alarmed at Gen. Mistchenko's raid, the Japanese are hastily fortifying Sing-min-Tung.

FIGHT AS FIGURED IN RUSSIA.

Nebogatoff's Surrender Regarded as a Disgrace.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 30.—The first definite news from Russian sources of the naval battle fought in the Straits of Korea came from Capt. Chagin of the cruiser Almaz, who has arrived at Vladivostok. He telegraphed to the Emperor that he had witnessed the sinking of the battleship Kniaz Souvaroff, and reported that Admiral Rojestvensky was wounded. Capt. Chagin saw Rojestvensky lowered on board the torpedo-boat destroyer Buiny.

Other private dispatches from Vladivostok say the Japanese torpedo boats played the principal rôle in the defeat of the Russian fleet. They were sent in for action again and again under a perfect hail of shot from the Russian rapid-firing guns. More than one-half of the Japanese flotilla of torpedo boats was sunk.

Whatever other information was contained in Capt. Chagin's telegram was withheld, and no details are known except those contained in the foreign dispatches from which the naval officers have been able to reconstruct a fair idea of the fight.

They figure that Admiral Togo with his main squadron must have lain somewhere off the coast of Korea, while Admirals Kamimura and Uriu held their squadrons further north to head off the Russian vessels which might get through Togo's lines or be prepared to bar the entrance to the Straits of Tsugaru in case the Russians should be reported moving up the east coast of Japan.

When Togo's scouts reported that Admiral Rojestvensky was heading for the eastern channel of the Straits of Korea the Japanese Admiral went around the northern part of the Tsu Islands and came upon the Russians steaming in double column with the cruisers to port. Togo enjoyed the great advantage of tactical position when he opened fire, having the lightest of the Russian ships between him and Rojestvensky's heavier vessels, the fire of the latter being thus smothered. Besides Togo was able to use all his broadsides, whereas the sternmost ships of the Russian columns coming on in line ahead formation could probably only with difficulty use any guns at all.

Nevertheless, although suffering the complete loss of four ships in the desperate encounter which followed, and being subjected to a series of torpedo attacks, Rojestvensky was able to steam 200 miles during Saturday night. When Sunday morning came the Russian fleet was divided into two divisions. The faster and stronger division, under Rojestvensky, was met by Kamimura and Uriu, while the slower division, under Nebogatoff, renewed the fight with Togo.

With some of the scattered Russian units it was a case of save himself who can. In the running fight yesterday the Japanese enjoyed the advantage of superior speed, enabling them to concentrate their fire and bring every crippled Russian ship to bay. Admiral Nebogatoff's battered remnant surrendered off Liancourt Rocks, while Rojestvensky, with the best remaining battleships, fought on for the honor of the Russian Navy.

The Admiralty learned with a sense of relief that the flagship Kniaz Souvaroff sank under the feet of the Russian Commander-in-Chief. The surrender of Nebogatoff's two battleships, even though the circumstances are not yet known, is regarded as a disgrace.

The Committee of Ministers to-day commenced the consideration of the plan for the constitution of the National Assembly, as formulated by the Bouligin Rescript Commission, and it is possible that if the news of the Russian naval disaster reacts seriously on the temper of the people there may be an attempt to relieve the situation by an early announcement on this subject.

RUSSIA WILL KNOW OF DISASTER TO-DAY

Government No Longer Tries to Conceal Extent of Loss.

PITIFUL SCENES AT ADMIRALTY

When Fears of Anxious Parents Are Confirmed—Preparing the People for the News.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 30.—Whatever hesitation may have existed here about accepting the awful story of the disaster in the Korean Straits vanished before the information sent by Gen. Linevitch to the Emperor, summarizing reports brought into Vladivostok by vessels of the Baltic fleet which escaped destruction.

The subsequent stages of the cataclysm as related in the Tokio telegrams form an ensemble of heartrending desolation before which the bitterest enemy of Russia might well stand appalled.

The Government no longer even attempts to conceal the extent of the loss, and to-morrow all Russia will know the magnitude of the disaster. The public has been gradually prepared by gloomy editorials in to-day's papers, which in some cases hinted at and in others openly announced defeat. The Novoe Vremya ascribed it to fate; the Birzheviyk Viedomosti to national deficiencies, while the Razsvet went so far as boldly to urge immediate peace.

The Emperor received the dread confirmation at Tsarskoe-Selo this morning, but Gen. Linevitch's dispatch did not reach the Ministries until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The Admiralty was crowded with anxious parents. I witnessed a pitiful scene there when the official telegram was received. A veteran Admiral who had come for news broke down on hearing of the loss of the Borodino. "My only son and two grandsons were on board," he exclaimed, his voice shaking with emotion.

Naval circles are woefully downcast, realising that the disaster means the disappearance of Russia as a naval power for many years to come; but a due tribute of praise is bestowed upon the enemy, whose heroism is unsurpassed in the annals of warfare.

Capt. Klado, in a technical article, tries to minimize the Japanese victory by explaining that Rojestvensky was hampered by the confined space in which the battle was fought, but fails to account for the crushing nature of the defeat. The only surmise possible is that the Russian battleships were pierced through their decks while rolling in the heavy sea.

NO INDEMNITY FROM FRANCE.

Report That Japan Would Demand $100,000,000 Is Denied.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1905.]

LONDON, May 30.—An emphatic, authoritative denial comes from Paris of the report that Japan had demanded an indemnity from France on account of the aid and comfort she rendered to the Baltic Fleet while it was en route to its destruction.

Another denial to the same effect comes from the highest Japanese sources of information in London, and coupled with it is the statement that Japan harbors no ill-will toward France for the benevolent neutrality she exercised on Admiral Rojestvensky's behalf.

It is admitted that Japan probably would feel differently had the naval battle resulted indecisively or in the absolute defeat of her navy; but in consideration of the practical annihilation of the Baltic fleet it is said that Japan takes the philosophic view that France has done her inestimable service.

Without the assistance rendered to Rojestvensky by Russia's ally he never could have delivered his fleet into the hands of his enemy, and the Japanese hold that while that fleet existed it was a distinct menace to them, wherever it might be.

So Japan really feels grateful to France for nursing and nourishing Rojestvensky and helping him along on his journey to Japanese waters. Grateful, she doesn't bother about motives nor worry about the thought that France really meant to be kind to Russia rather than to Russia's little yellow enemy.

Thus once again the old saying comes true that all's well that ends well.

By The Associated Press.

PARIS, May 30.—The Foreign Office absolutely denies the rumor cabled from Paris and circulated in the United States that Dr. Motono, the Japanese Minister, on behalf of his Government, has demanded from France through Foreign Minister Delcassé the sum of $100,000,000 as damages for French breaches of neutrality in connection with the voyage of Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—The reports that a large indemnity amounting to one hundred millions will be required of France by Japan is denied at the Japanese Legation as absolutely without foundation. The further report that Japan, being master of the seas, will dispute the power of France and drive her from the Orient is not given serious consideration.

DON'T EXPECT HURRIED PEACE.

French Officials Point Out Slow Methods of Russian Diplomacy.

PARIS, Wednesday, May 31.—The view that prevails in official quarters here is that some time must elapse before Russia reaches a final determination as to her future course. It is anticipated, however, that she is likely to canvass the situation among the friendly nations with the purpose of ascertaining the best possible basis for the conclusion of the war. The French officials say they do not expect such negotiations to advance rapidly, owing to the leisurely methods of Russian diplomacy and the conflicting internal elements.

It is certain that if Foreign Minister Delcassé's advice is solicited it will be exerted in behalf of peace, but there is no indication that France will take the initiative until definitely requested to do so.

Conversing recently with a diplomat relative to the possibilities of peace, M. Delcassé said it was easy to give advice, but difficult to have it accepted. Nevertheless his influence had been constantly exerted toward a pacific solution.

Premier Rouvier has the same views as M. Delcassé, and powerful financial interests are in favor of peace.

The officials of the Japanese Legation received the news of Togo's victory without demonstrative enthusiasm. A member of the legation said:

"It was part of our programme, which is not finished. We shall be ready to examine terms of peace only when Russia puts them forth in definite form."

SUBMARINES STORY DOUBTED.

Japanese Legation Does Not Believe They Were Used in Battle.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—At the Japanese Legation doubt is expressed as to the use of submarines in the great naval battle of Saturday and Sunday.

The fact that torpedo attack was used as a principal part of the tactical programme of the Japanese gives color to the report that submarines were in the fight. But the fact that the Japanese Navy has upward of 200 torpedo boats, and had them within quick call of the scene of the battle shows that to this class of craft is due a large measure of credit for the result of the fight.

It is admitted that Japan has invested in submarines, but the number is few, and their use has thus far been chiefly experimental. It is believed here that they did not have a large share in the battle. At the Navy Department it is stated that American naval authorities have no information that the Japanese have any submarines.

Mistaken Battle Formation.

LONDON, Wednesday, May 31.—The Shanghai correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says that the completeness of the Russian defeat was largely due to a mistaken battle formation.

The armored ships were on the starboard side, with the cruisers and gunboats on the port side. The Japanese main force coming from the northwest attacked the port line first, and promptly threw it into disorder. This disorganized the starboard line. Thus the real action was of very short duration.

The sinking of so many iron-clads and the surrender of others without fighting, however, the correspondent says, demands explanation.

CALLS VICTORY TOO GREAT.

Austrian Semi-Official Paper Fears Its Effects.

VIENNA, May 30.—The newspapers here, with the exception of the Fremdenblatt, continue to express satisfaction at the Russian defeat.

The Fremdenblatt, which is the semi-official exponent of the Government's views, declares that the Japanese victory was too great and sweeping to be fully acceptable to Great Britain and the United States and that it may not bring peace but rather give the diplomats new work along the lines of the readjustment of international relations.

RESCUED A BRITISH SHIP.

Steamer Captured by Russians and Saved by Japanese.

TOKIO, May 30.—It now appears that the report of the sinking of an American vessel by the fleet of Admiral Rojestvensky grew out of the seizure of the British steamer Oldhamia, bound for Japan.

The Oldhamia was later retaken by Japanese warships.

The Oldhamia left New York on March 26, bound for Hongkong. She is a new vessel of 2,347 tons, owned by Sivewright, Bacon & Co. of West Hartlepool, England.

FATE OF RUSSIAN SHIPS.

Twenty War Vessels Sunk, Damaged, or Captured by the Japanese.

The following table summarizes the fate of the principal Russian ships:

KNIAZ SOUVAROFF, battleship, Admiral Rojestvensky's flagship, 13,516 tons. Sunk afternoon of May 27.
OREL, battleship, 13,516 tons. Captured May 28. Now at Maizuru, Japan.
IMPERATOR ALEXANDER III., battleship, 13,516 tons. Sunk May 27.
BORODINO, battleship, 13,516 tons. Sunk May 27.
OBLYABYA, battleship, 12,674 tons. Sunk.
SISSOI VELIKY, battleship, 10,400 tons. Sunk May 29.
NAVARIN, battleship, 10,206 tons. Sunk.
IMPERATOR NIKOLAI I., battleship, 9,672 tons. Captured May 28. Now at Sasebo, Japan.
ADMIRAL APRAXINE, coast defense ship, 4,126 tons. Captured May 28. Now at Sasebo.
ADMIRAL OUSHAKOFF, coast defense ship, 4,648 tons. Sunk May 28, after refusing to surrender.
ADMIRAL SENIAVIN, coast defense ship, 4,792 tons. Captured May 28. Now at Sasebo.
ADMIRAL NAKHIMOFF, armored cruiser, 8,524 tons. Sunk, May 27.
DMITRI DONSKOI, armored cruiser, 6,200 tons. Sunk, but appears to be in position where Japanese can raise her.
VLADIMIR MONOMAKH, armored cruiser, 5,593 tons. Captured, and foundered after capture.
AURORA, cruiser, 6,731 tons. Fate unknown.
OLEG, cruiser, 6,675 tons. Fate unknown.
IZUMRUD, cruiser, 3,106 tons. Fled May 28. Fate unknown. Sighted by steamer Doric.
JEMCHUG, cruiser, 3,106 tons. Sunk May 27, according to Japanese reports. Has arrived at Vladivostok, according to one Russian report.
SVIETLANA, cruiser, 3,862 tons. Sunk May 27.
ALMAZ, cruiser, 3,285 tons. Saved. At Vladivostok. Japanese official report says she was disabled.

RUSSIA WILL FIGHT ON, SAYS CZAR'S AMBASSADOR

Peace Impossible After Crushing Defeat, Asserts Cassini.

A NEW FLEET, NO INDEMNITY

Negotiations Might Have Been Possible After Liao-Yang—Takahira and Taft See President.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—"Until some word of peace comes out of Tsarskoe-Selo, Nippon has but to fight on."

This remark of Mr. Takahira, the Japanese Minister, made to-night with the details of the victory of the Japanese fleet before him, accurately sets forth not only his opinion, but, it is believed, that of the Washington and other neutral Governments represented here regarding the effect of the battle upon Russia's policy.

Whether Count Cassini, the Russian Amabassador, will be the bearer of such a message when he sees the President to-morrow or Thursday remains to be seen, but the Ambassador in conversation with a correspondent to-night was more emphatic than at any time since the war in the declaration that the war would go on indefinitely. While admitting that he would see the President soon and have a long conference on the general situation, the Ambassador strongly discouraged hopes of an early peace. He added:

"Perhaps after Liao Yang there was a possibility of peace. I will not say there was not an idea of peace at that time in certain quarters, but now, after this crushing defeat, never. The Japanese talk of indemnity. Russia can better expend this money in the building of another fleet. Certainly this is not the time when Russia can afford to take up the question of peace."

It is this apparent determination of Russia to continue, in the face of disastrous defeats on land and sea, which discourages the Washington Government at this time from taking any positive step toward offering assistance to the belligerents in coming to an understanding. It is believed here, however, that when Russia, through her own agents, has learned the full extent of her losses she may be approached regarding peace with some hope that overtures will be welcomed. It is such an opportunity for which this Government is watching.

Soon after the President returned from New York this evening, Secretary Taft, who had been out of the city about a week, called at the White House, and was in conference with him for several hours. While the Secretary was there dispatches arrived from the Japanese Legation, giving details of the battle, which the President read with keen interest.

The President and the Secretary discussed a number of matters, but the outlook for peace occupied much of their time. It is realized that the crushing character of the Russian defeat gives to the President an opportunity with entire propriety to offer his services to the St. Petersburg Government in establishing communication with Tokio, but until it can be learned that such an offer would probably be successful this Government is not inclined to act.

Throughout the Diplomatic Corps today the keenest interest was displayed in the news of the conference which Mr. Takahira, the Japanese Minister, had with the President at the White House last night.

ROJESTVENSKY'S EARLY FAME.

Was a Hero for a Time, Till His Alleged Exploit Was Denied.

In 1877 Admiral Rojestvensky was a Lieutenant on the little Russian sloop of war Vesta. The commander of the Vesta was his friend Capt. Baranow. Soon after the outbreak of the war between Russia and Turkey it was reported that the Vesta had fought a terrific battle in the Black Sea with a large Turkish ironclad, which, after five hours' combat, had been put to flight, badly damaged and unable to continue her duel with her little Russian antagonist.

This victory was considered so remarkable that Rojestvensky was ordered forthwith to St. Petersburg to render in person to the Admiralty an exhaustive report of the encounter. The young Lieutenant, in obedience to these orders, went to the capital with a written report, said to have been the work of himself and Capt. Baranow.

The Vesta, according to the report, attacked the iron-clad Fethi Bouland, and, through the bravery of her crew and the cleverness of her officers, managed to get the upper hand in the fight from the very start. The climax of the battle came when Rojestvensky, himself firing a gun, succeeded in throwing a shell into the smokestack of the Turk, where it exploded, wrecked the engines and the biggest deck gun, and caused a conflagration on board the iron-clad, which fled.

Capt. Baranow and Lieut. Rojestvensky soon became national heroes. Hobart Pasha, the Turkish Admiral, happened to pick up a newspaper with an account of the Vesta's great fight. He denounced the whole story as a fabrication. He declared that the two vessels had exchanged a couple of shots at long range, and that then the Vesta immediately turned and fled. This version was later borne out by the statement of the chief engineer of the Turkish war vessel, who was an Englishman.

Rojestvensky then wrote a letter to the Novoe Vremiya declaring that the report of the battle was a lie, and had been written by him at the direction of Capt. Baranow. The latter was bereft of his rank as Adjutant to the Czar, which he had obtained on the strength of his supposed heroic deed.

WON'T CELEBRATE TOO SOON.

But Local Japanese Will Soon Commemorate Togo's Victory.

The reported statement made by the Czar that despite the big sea loss the war would be continued occasioned little surprise among the Japanese in New York. In referring to the statement S. Uchida, Japanese Consul General here, said:

"The Czar's declaration that he would continue the war neither surprises nor disappoints us. We never expected that a sea battle would terminate the war.

"Contrary to the statement sometimes made that the Japanese cannot hold out much longer if war continues, the contrary is true. We are prepared for a long fight. If necessary we can continue fighting for the next five or six years. Japan has ample resources, both with men and money, to continue as long as Russia demands."

The Nippon Club, 44 West Eighty-fifth Street, yesterday entertained a large number of Japanese visitors, who discussed plans for a celebration befitting the great sea victory. While it was first thought to hold the celebration some time this week, Japanese officials consider it best to be conservative in making plans for rejoicing over the victory.

"I have warned the Japanese people to be cautious about being too enthusiastic, and to await more detailed information," said a prominent Japanese Government official yesterday. "It will be remembered that the Russians celebrated a victory they were yet to win on last Saturday. We do not wish to make any such mistake."

Elaborate plans, however, have been made for a celebration in connection with the reception to be held at the Nippon Club this evening in honor of Baron Kaneko and K. Takahashi. One hundred invitations have been issued to the affair. Japanese saki will take the place of champagne, other Japanese refreshments will be served, and Japanese music will be played. This will be the first Japanese social event on an elaborate scale ever held in New York.

NO GRAFT IN JAPAN.

Dr. Jordan Compares Conditions There and in Russia.

CHICAGO, May 30.—"Graft is a thing entirely unknown in Japan," said Dr. David Starr Jordan, President of Leland Stanford University, last night in an address at one of the meetings preliminary to the regular sessions of the Congress of Religion.

"I venture to say," continued Dr. Jordan, "that in the present war not $100 of Japanese war funds has been stolen. On the other hand, I presume that not one dollar in twenty, if one in a hundred, on the side of the Russians ever reached its proper destination. I heard of only one dishonest Japanese while in the country, and he was one whose morals had been contaminated by residence abroad."

Dr. Jordan's lecture was largely upon Shintoism, which, he said, was not ancestor worship, but the spirit of living so that ancestors would not be ashamed of their descendants.

EQUITABLE REPORT SOON.

Hendricks Will in a Few Days Tell of Result of Pressure on Higgins.

Gov. Higgins came to town last evening and went to the residence of his brother-in-law, Frank Sullivan Smith. He returned at midnight to Albany.

With the Governor on his trip to New York were Superintendent of Insurance Hendricks and Robert Hunter, the examiner of the Insurance Department, who has been investigating the affairs of the Equitable. Gov. Higgins and Superintendent Hendricks held a long conference in Albany yesterday before their departure for New York. The conference had to do with the request of Messrs. Lauterbach and Platt that Superintendent Hendricks make an immediate report on the condition in which he found the Equitable Life's affairs. It is understood that a report from the Superintendent may be looked for within the next few days.

The frequent conferences which have taken place between Gov. Higgins and Superintendent Hendricks of late have led to intimations that Superintendent Hendricks's report may contain some findings which will make it necessary for the Governor to recommend the enactment of important legislation relative to the conduct of insurance companies when he issues his message calling a special session of the Legislature.

As yet Gov. Higgins has not disclosed to even his most intimate friends when he will call the special session. He still has hope, it is said, that Justice Warren B. Hooker will resign his place on the Supreme Court bench and thereby obviate the necessity of having an extra session to try the charges against him. The Governor would like to avoid the necessity of a special session if possible. He realizes that if the Legislature meets the pressure to have it take up other matters than the charges against Justice Hooker will be difficult to resist. Cheap gas, the repeal of the savings bank tax and legislation to remedy evils in the management of insurance companies, as revealed by the Equitable disclosures, are among the matters which will be urged.

It was said in Republican circles yesterday that State Chairman Odell had been persuaded to hasten his return from abroad on account of the problems which are pressing upon the organization. It is understood that he will sail from Southampton on June 15.

Friends of George W. Aldrich, the Republican leader of Monroe County, are getting the impression that his appointment as a member of the State Commission on Gas and Electricity is by no means certain. When it became known that Gov. Higgins did not intend to sign the bill increasing the size of the Railroad Commission, it was generally supposed that Aldridge was certain to receive a place on the State Lighting Commission.

Recently there has been a quiet report in circulation that Gov. Higgins was unable to see his way clear to make Aldridge a member of that commission. It is said that he wishes to keep the commission free from even a suspicion that it will be used for political purposes. It has been suggested that ex-Mayor Low might be asked to take the Chairmanship of the commission.

The Governor, Lieut. Gov. Bruce, Senator Chauncey M. Depew, and Mayor Low, with about twenty-five of the officers of the Governor's military staff, had luncheon at the Hotel Majestic yesterday as the guests of the officers of the Grand Army of the Republic.

UP AND DOWN AFTER THIEF.

Detectives Chase Man to Roof, Then to Cellar, and Get Him.

James Hayden of 160 East Forty-eighth Street started to the Grand Central Station early yesterday morning to buy a ticket for Boston. He showed a roll of over $50 in a cigar store in Forty-second Street. The money was promptly seized by a young man. Hayden's cries attracted the attention of Detectives Kane and Norton, who followed the runner.

Their chase led them up four flights of stairs at 160 East Forty-second Street, across the roofs of three buildings, and down into the coal cellar of a building. They caught the runner and locked him up in the East Thirty-fifth Street Station, charged with robbery. He described himself as Schuyler Chester.

DROVE INTO THE RIVER.

Midnight Adventure of a Middletown Candy Manufacturer.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., May 30.—While driving along a twenty-foot embankment along the Wallkill River late last night Charles Giesner, a candy manufacturer of this city, together with a companion, had a narrow escape from death.

The night was very dark and the horse missed the road and walked over the embankment. The next instant horse, carriage, and occupants were struggling in the water. Giesner and his companion escaped with severe bruises, but the horse was found dead this morning at the foot of a dam, a mile away.

TOGO'S MEN LIKENED TO THE UNION'S HEROES

Depew Stirs a G. A. R. Audience by a Eulogy of Japan.

THEN SOUNDS A WARNING

If We Would Have Such Soldiers and Sailors We Must Curb Immigration, He Says.

Togo and the men who helped him win his Trafalgar of the Far East shared with the heroes who fought and died for this country in both eulogy and applause at the memorial exercises held in Carnegie Hall last night, under the auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Senator Depew, who was the orator of this the thirty-first anniversary occasion, is an ex-United States Minister to Japan. In his address he referred to the splendid victory of Admiral Togo and compared the spirit of the Japanese soldiers and sailors to the spirit of the men who fought for the Union in the civil war.

There had been applause and cheers in plenty as the Senator reviewed the great struggle between North and South and named the heroes who had added to its glory, but nothing like the storm that broke when he referred to the heroic deeds of Togo and his fighters. Men cheered and applauded, and the women in the boxes waved their handkerchiefs for fully two minutes.

"The world was thrilled yesterday," said Senator Depew, "as it has not been since the days of Trafalgar by the astounding victory of Admiral Togo. Coupled with the almost equal successes on land of Field Marshal Oyama, it makes an epic of warfare on land and sea seldom equaled in the history of the world, and never to be forgotten.

"There enters with the peace that must speedily come a new power into the family of nations with racial, traditional, and religious conditions differing widely from all others. The Orient, whose markets have been the contention of all the great industrial powers, is to fall under the dominating influence of an Oriental Government.

"In 1866 I was appointed Minister from the United States to Japan. The Japanese in those days fought with spears and arrows, and had a feudal system like that which dominated Europe in the eleventh century. From 1866 to 1905 they have made greater progress than any Western nation ever made in an equal period in the history of the world.

"The Japanese to-day are a free people, with a constitutional and representative Government, a free press and universal education, and present a fiery patriotism which reckons that life glorious which is sacrificed for their country. In Russia conditions are reversed.

"The spirit of the Japanese army and navy was our spirit during the civil war—a love for country, for Union, and for liberty that reckoned not the cost, but sought only the triumph. The lesson of Togo's victory is the lesson of Bunker Hill and the lesson of Lexington repeated—that it is not so much the gun that matters as the spirit of the freeman behind the gun."

Toward the close of his address he sounded a note of warning, called forth by the great increase in immigration and the change in the character of the immigrants to this country.

"In the Union Army," the Senator said, "the native-born and the naturalized citizen fought side by side, but we must not be blind to the fact that in the last ten years the immigration to our shores has changed in character and quality and enormously increased in quantity.

"The Governments of the Old World and every parish in those countries are engaged in dumping upon us their incapables, their vicious, their diseased, and their burdens. At the rate of a million a year the immigrants are pouring through our ports into our country.

"The feeble efforts to sift the unworthy after arrival and deport them accomplishes little. There must be speedily a system of inspection, investigation, registration, and certification on the other side which will halt the pauper, the diseased, and the criminal before they start. No appropriation which would be sufficient to meet this evil would be an extravagance—rather a protection greater than many battleships.

"The Republic which the Union soldiers gained for us, if it is to continue with all its liberties, opportunities, laws, order, and happiness unimpaired must protect and maintain as a most sacred duty the high quality of its citizenship."

Carnegie Hall was crowded. Ex-Mayor Low presided and called forth great applause by a touching eulogy of the unnamed dead of the civil war. Among those on the platform was Lieut. Gov. M. Linn Bruce, who occupied a seat by the side of Senator Depew.

CHOATES SAIL FOR HOME.

Hearty Send-Off from British Friends in London and Liverpool.

LONDON, May 30.—Mr. Choate, the retiring American Ambassador, and Mrs. Choate left Euston Station at noon today on their way to Liverpool, where they embarked on the steamer Caronia for New York. A large gathering of English friends and a few Americans bade them farewell. Owing to the fact that a Cabinet meeting was taking place at the same hour, no Cabinet Ministers were present.

Among those at the station were Col. Douglas Dawson, Master of Ceremonies, representing King Edward; Lord Wemyss and Sir Bernard Eric Barrington, representing the Foreign Office; Lord Roberts, Mrs. Chamberlain, the Marchioness of Lansdowne, and the Duke and Duchess of Somerset. The Americans included the entire staff of the embassy, Lord Fairfax, and Bourke Cockran.

As the train departed three cheers were given. Mr. and Mrs. Choate had been provided with a royal saloon car for their journey to Liverpool.

LIVERPOOL, May 30.—An enthusiastic send-off was given here to Mr. and Mrs. Choate. The Deputy Lord Mayor of Liverpool, members of the City Council, and many influential persons were at the dock to say farewell. The Lady Mayoress presented bouquets to Mr. and Mrs. Choate. The Caronia moved out amid cheers, while the ship's band played "Auld Lang Syne."

JAPANESE AID HINDUS.

Send $5,000 for the Relief of the Earthquake Victims.

SIMLA, May 30.—The newspaper Jiji Shimpo of Tokio has sent to Viceroy Curzon $5,000 for the relief of sufferers from the recent earthquakes, with an expression of sympathy from the people of Japan for those of India, Japan's "beloved ally."

Lord Curzon in his reply gave expression to the Anglo-Indian admiration for Japanese chivalry and heroism, declaring that recent events would not fail to draw the two peoples closer together.

"FEMALE RAFFLES" IN JAIL.

Was Arrested on the Boardwalk at Asbury for a Seashore Theft.

Special to The New York Times.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., May 30.—Edna Williams, the "female Raffles," was arrested here to-day on the Boardwalk for a theft in Atlantic City.

She is the daughter of a Long Branch merchant and won her sobriquet by robberies in Lakewood and Newark. She was tried in New York for a jewel robbery, but was acquitted.

NO SYMPATHETIC STRIKE.

But New York Teamsters Will Send $1,900 a Day to Chicago.

The official announcement was made last evening by General Organizer Moynihan of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters that there would be no sympathetic strike of the New York teamsters in aid of the striking teamsters in Chicago. Instead of ordering a sympathetic strike, the Executive Council has levied a per capita assessment of 5 cents a day on the 38,000 members of the twenty-three locals in Greater New York, to continue while the strike lasts.

After thorough consideration it was concluded that a sympathetic strike would do no good, and that by remaining at work the New York teamsters could aid the Chicago strikers effectively by their contribution. Up to date the New York unions had been contributing $1,000 daily. Now they will be contributing $1,900 daily.

After final conferences with the New York representatives of a number of the express companies relative to the Chicago strike, Levy Mayer, counsel for the Employers' Association and the express companies of Chicago, returned to that city yesterday afternoon. He said that the situation was unchanged, and that the determination not to yield was as resolute as ever.

"This is final. There will be no yielding in any way at any time," said Mr. Mayer.

CHICAGO, May 30.—There was nothing done on either side of the teamster strike to-day, but active hostilities are promised for to-morrow, and the chief trouble is expected to come in the lumber district.

In addition to the lumber teamsters who are now out there will in all probability be a strike of all the men employed by thirty-five sash and door factories, as those concerns have announced that to-morrow they will commence making deliveries to boycotted houses. The Weaver Coal Company, one of the largest concerns in the city, announced this afternoon that commencing to-morrow it would make deliveries of coal to all boycotted houses.

The Executive Council of the teamsters is reported to be divided on the question of submitting the question of calling off the strike to a referendum vote of all the members of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters throughout the country.

A crowd of more than 800 persons, armed with clubs and other weapons, surrounded three wagons owned by a lumber company last night. The non-union drivers and special policemen who were guarding them were attacked, and nine men were arrested, charged with assault and disorderly conduct.

While the wagons were passing along North Halsted Street a number of persons ran into the street and seized the bridles of the horses. Attempts were made to pull the drivers from the wagons. The police clubbed the rioters.

The teamsters are to make an effort to induce the building trades to reconsider their action withdrawing "moral and financial support" from the strikers.

STOPS AT UNION BLOODSHED.

When Labor Resorts to Violence It Can't Count on Cushman.

Special to The New York Times

MOUNT VERNON, Washington, May 30.—Congressman F. W. Cushman of Tacoma in a Memorial Day address delivered there to-day launched into a discussion of present labor troubles. Commenting on the driving of non-union men into the sea at Tacoma and Bellingham he said:

"No man can say that I have been unfaithful to the cause of those who labor. But when they resort to violence and bloodshed, right there I quit. I will not march under a flag that is drenched with the blood of assassinated victims. I don't care who is carrying it or what emblem is painted on it."

SAVED FROM SINKING LAUNCH.

The Steamship Manhattan Rescued Three Imperiled New Yorkers.

Special to The New York Times.

PORTLAND, Me., May 30.—When the steamship Manhattan of the Maine Steamship line arrived in port from New York this morning she brought as enforced passengers George S. MacDonald of the Motorboat Pblishing Company, 1,133 Broadway, New York; Mr. Baylus of the same firm, and Mr. MacDonald's twelve-year-old son, all of whom had been rescued from a sinking motor launch off Monomoy Point at 9 o'clock Monday night, when they were so exhausted from six hours' work in trying to keep the craft afloat that they could scarcely move.

Messrs. MacDonald and Baylus left Glouscester, Mass., Sunday with a new forty-foot racing launch which had just been built for them at that place, and which they intended to use both as a racing launch and a press boat for the publication in which they are interested. The boat, since she was new and had not soaked tight, leaked badly all the way. On Pollock Rip Shoals Monday afternoon she ran into a terrific chop sea, and just at this point the engine gave out.

At 9 o'clock the Manhattan came within fifteen feet of running them down, and lay to for almost two hours before she succeeded in getting a lifeboat to the imperiled navigators. The rescued returned to New York on the Manhattan to-night.

BAPTISMS IN FLUSHING BAY.

Preacher Leads a Score of Shivering Converts Into the Water.

About 100 people, singing and praying on the shore of Flushing Bay, at Wenzel's Boathouse, near the junction of Flushing Road and Jackson Avenue, Corona, L. I., attracted a large crowd yesterday. The singing and praying was the prelude to a baptizing on a large scale, and while the crowd was speculating as to what was coming twenty men and women walked in a solemn procession from the bathhouses on the pier.

The men were dressed in black and the women wore spotless white. After another prayer the clergyman strode out into the water until it came up to his waist, and then he beckoned to one of the men to come out. The man timidly walked in and came up from the immersion shivering and his teeth chattering. The women were more timid than the men, but they all underwent the ordeal, and came from the water singing hymns.

SPECTATOR OF FIGHT SHOT.

One of Participants Fired and Killed a Bystander.

FORT LEE, N. J., May 30.—Henry General, nineteen years old, a barber of this place, shot and killed Frederick Manfried late to-night. General was arrested, and is now locked up in the Hackensack Jail.

The killing of Manfried was an accident, according to eye witnesses. General and Louis Jensen quarreled. General drew a revolver, which was discharged, and Manfried was shot dead.

KIDNAPPER CAUGHT IN A MORNING RAID

Five Carried Victims to Poughkeepsie by Freight.

POLICE OUT FOR THEM AT 2 A.M.

Four Escaped—They Stripped Two Men of Clothes and Cash in Daylight on Sunday.

The police were turned out at 2 o'clock this morning along the line of the New York Central Railway in the city to look for five thugs who after robbing two men here last Sunday had carried them off in a freight car and leaving them in Poughkeepsie were making their way back to town. The search resulted in the capture of one of the five. Four got away.

The five men met Thomas J. Mapleton and David Martin walking on the New York Central tracks by the Hudson River, opposite Seventy-ninth Street, last Sunday afternoon.

"Give us your money and your clothes!" commanded one of the five. Mapleton and Martin demurred. They were promptly thrown on the ground and stripped of all their outer clothing.

"Here, you can have ours!" said two of the thugs, and they tossed their dirty rags to the two men. Mapleton and Martin were so taken aback they didn't even yell. Every order that came from the five they obeyed without question.

There was an empty freight train standing by.

"Get in there with you!" ordered one of the men, pointing to one of the cars, and the victims, half clad, jumped in. The five got on top of the car just as the train pulled out on its journey up the river. Once or twice Martin and Mapleton stuck their heads out of the open door, but every time they did this a gun would appear over the edge of the car roof and a voice would say:

"Stay in there a while, or you'll get hurt."

Martin and Mapleton stayed.

When the train was leaving Fishkill the five jumped off, leaving the two in the car. At Poughkeepsie the victims put on the tramps' garments and jumped out. They went to Police Headquarters and told their story.

It was learned last night that the five were on their way back here. As a result an alarm was sent out. Detectives from the West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Station saw five men answering the description given to them on an incoming freight train in the Mott Haven yards at 2:15 o'clock this morning and tried to get them. The sole prisoner gave the name of George Ernest. He was locked up.

DEAD FOR DAYS IN HER ROOM.

Woman Had a Wound Which Police Think Self-Inflicted.

Mrs. Josephine Ruppert, a waitress, was found dead with a wound in her throat in a room she occupied at 207 Twenty-sixth Street, Brooklyn, last night. Police of the Fourth Avenue Station expressed the opinion that she had committed suicide.

Mrs. Ruppert was twenty-nine years old. The neighbors say her husband did not live with her. She occupied one room and worked in a restaurant in Manhattan. A few days ago she told one of the neighbors that she was pressed for money and was behind in her rent. On Monday an agent of the landlord tacked a notice on the door warning her to pay the rent or get out.

Last night the neighbors, becoming fearful that something was wrong with Mrs. Ruppert, as she had not been seen since Saturday, called Policeman Sorensen. He forced the door.

Ambulance Surgeon Storke of the Norwegian Hospital said that she seemingly had been dead at least two days.

FROM WEDDING TO MAD WARD.

Albany Clothier on Honeymoon Taken Ill at the Netherland.

De Witt Altman, a young clothier of Albany, who was married in that city on Monday by his brother, the Rev. Dr. Frederick Altman of Stamford, Conn., came to New York on the Monday night boat with his bride and drove to the Hotel Netherland yesterday morning as the first stopping place on the honeymoon tour. Just as the couple were about to register young Altman acted so that the hotel people declined to accept him as a guest under the circumstances.

Because of his faith as a Presbyterian, the Rev. Dr. Altman took his brother to the Presbyterian Hospital. They were so crowded there, it was said, that they asked to have the patient taken to Roosevelt. He was kept but two hours, as he became so violent that the attendants had to put him into a straitjacket.

Then it was decided to transfer him to Bellevue, where he was sent to the psychopathic ward. Up to a late hour no reason for his malady had been learned.

HOSPITAL STORMED AT LODZ.

Cossacks Fire on the Workmen—No Meat in the City.

LODZ, Russian Poland, May 30.—The strike here is extending, and 35,000 men are now out.

A Police Sergeant was shot and killed in the streets during the night.

Six hundred workmen attempted to storm the Red Cross Hospital, believing that one of their comrades wounded in to-day's rioting was lying there dead. Cossacks were summoned, and fired on the workmen, wounding five of them seriously and several slightly.

Two thousand troops have arrived from Warsaw. The situation is critical, and several manufacturers have fled to Warsaw. The mobs prevented others from leaving. There is no meat in the city, and poultry is at famine prices.

DROWNED IN PARK LAKE.

Alfred Bergman Lost Life and Girl Friend Is Missing.

A young man, supposed to be Alfred Bergman, a clerk of 825 East Eighty-third Street, ended his holiday by drowning in the lake in Central Park, at Seventy-third Street. He applied for a boat about 9 o'clock, sculled away in awkward fashion, and was lost in the craft which dotted the waters.

Soon screams were heard. Brown, the boatkeeper, and Policeman Baer put off and found the young man's boat upset. It is supposed that he lost one of the oars, and in endeavoring to regain it reached too far over the side and fell overboard. His body was recovered by grappling.

The Arsenal police later received a visit from a Mr. Tauber of 441 East Seventy-fourth Street, who told them that his daughter Josephine, nineteen years old, had gone out early in the evening with Bergman.

It was after he received the news that Bergman had been found drowned that the father began to search for his daughter whose continued absence from home had caused him to worry.

The Arsenal Police at once agreed to drag the lake, as it was feared that she must have been in the boat with Bergman, although nobody remembers that he had a companion.

MANY MEN ENTOMBED.

Ten May Have Lost Life in Colorado Irrigation Tunnel.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTROSE, Col., May 30.—From four to ten workmen lost their lives and about twenty-five men are yet imprisoned by a cave-in at the Gunnison Tunnel, where the reclamation service of the Federal Government is digging a tunnel to let the waters from the Gunnison River through to water the Uncomahgre Valley. It is beleived the entombed men will all be rescued, as the air compressor is working nicely, pumping fresh air in to them. Taps from their picks can be heard at intervals.

The channel of Cedar Creek had to be diverted before the rescue could be attempted, as there was danger of the water drowning the men in the tunnel.

Eleven men were at the spot where the cave-in occurred. Only one, a trammer named Frank Grasse, escaped. He said that the others were about 100 feet from the mouth of the tunnel, while the twenty-five other workmen were 250 feet further in.

Recently the State Mining Engineer visited the tunnel and declared it safe. Reclamation Engineer McConnell, however, when he took charge of the work directed that the spot where the cave-in happened to-day be retimbered, and this work, it is believed, caused the walls to weaken, thus bringing about the accident.

The cave-in is estimated to be 100 feet wide. The survivors are between two piles of rocks, but are believed to have plenty of room. Signals are being transmitted by hammering on the air pipe, but none of the voices of the imprisoned men can be heard.

No names are being given out to-night, as all the officials are occupied with rescue work. All the dead are laborers. The imprisoned men cannot be liberated before to-morrow noon. A big crowd surrounds the scene.

POPE RECEIVES MGR. RYAN.

Tells Archbishop of Philadelphia Why That Is a Good City.

ROME, May 30.—Archbishop Ryan had an audience with the Pope to-day for half an hour in the private library of the Pontiff. The Pope thanked the Archbishop warmly for the Peter's Pence of $31,900 from the priests and people of his archdiocese, and added that he wished no report concerning Philadelphia, indicating that everything was going for the best there.

His Holiness sent his best blessing to the laymen, clericals, and temperance societies of Philadelphia, and asked Archbishop Ryan to return later and see him.

The Archbishop was accompanied by Mgr. Kennedy, rector of the American College at Rome, who remarked that Philadelphia was a good city. The Pope replied: "Yes, because it has a good Archbishop, good priests, and good laymen."

THE PRESIDENT HELPS BROOKLYN CELEBRATE

Makes a Memorial Day Address at the Slocum Statue.

ALSO TALKS TO THE JACKIES

Pleads for a Strong Navy—Spends Five Busy Hours Across the Bridge—Matches Smiles with McClellan.

President Roosevelt helped yesterday to make Brooklyn's Memorial Day the greatest in her history. He went there primarily to deliver an address at the unveiling of the statue of Gen. Henry W. Slocum—the man who at Gettysburg said "Stay and fight it out"—but did much more than that, participating in another exercise of the day and holding a reception.

The President, in accepting Brooklyn's invitation to help her celebrate the day, mapped out a programme which gave him five hours of as strenuous work as any one could demand. He arrived in Jersey City from Washington at 7:08 o'clock yesterday morning. At 12:48 o'clock yesterday afternoon he reached the Annex pier at Fulton Street, Brooklyn, to begin his trip back to Washington.

In that time, with the tramp-tramp-tramp of regulars, Guardsmen, and veterans, the music of scores of bands, and the cheers of thousands of delighted Brooklynites ringing in his ears much of the time, Mr. Roosevelt breakfasted at the Brooklyn Union League Club, where he had to shake many hands at a reception; reviewed the Memorial Day parade, and made a speech at the Slocum statue, and made another speech at the Naval Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, where he was the guest of Miss Helen Gould.

At the reviewing stand at the Slocum statue the President was at the side of Mayor McClellan, with whom he chatted and laughed until the crowd decided that the Mayor had as captivating a smile as the President's. The Mayor in his speech there paid a compliment to Mr. Roosevelt by referring to him as a gallant soldier. The President in his speech laid stress upon the friendship now existing between the North and South, and made a plea for a strong navy—which plea he repeated and elaborated upon in his talk to the jackies at the Young Men's Christian Association meeting later.

Mayor and President Grin.

While the President and the Mayor were standing side by side the crowd had lots of fun comparing the two men. In one particular they were alike, both grinned and laughed. This was because they had become the targets for a battery of cameras that kept clicking away until probably yards of film and more yards of glass plates had caught the negatives of the President of a great country and the Mayor of the greatest city in that country.

One difference between the two men that was noticed and made the subject of remark was that the President's close-cropped head is without a gray hair. Mayor McClellan, on the other hand, would not be re-elected if the gray hairs of his head, in opposition to the brown, started out to vote against him and Tammany would consent to that sort of election.

The "Fighting Edge."

In his talk to the Navy Yard men, who cheered and howled for the President at the end of nearly every paragraph of his speech, Mr. Roosevelt used a phrase that seemed to please the navy men very much. In referring to the preparedness and ability and spirit of the navy's fighters the President called these sailors "the men with the fighting edge."

The President also hit off another happy phrase when he said to the jackies that "first-class target practice" was "a positive provocative of peace." The jackies howled at this. The President grinned and laughed. In fact, his whole half day was one of bubbling good nature. The President pleased the jackies immensely when he told them that the navy "won hands down" at Manila and Santiago.

While President Roosevelt was moving from place to place in Brooklyn he was cheered and applauded everywhere.

Mr. Roosevelt's train, No. 40 on the Pennsylvania Railroad, rolled into the Jersey City terminus a few seconds before schedule time, 7:08 A. M., yesterday. His party was in the parlor car Courier and consisted of Secretary William Loeb, Jr., and Dr. C. F. Stokes. The bodyguard was Chief Agent Frank Tyree and Agent James Sloan. Waiting on the platform was a delegation from the Brooklyn Union League Club, of which W. E. Pulsifer was Chairman. Chief Inspector Moses W. Cortright of New York and Chief Benjamin Murphy and a squad of police of Jersey City, with special bodyguards Detective Sergeants Funston and Downing and ten detectives detailed by Chief Detective O'Brien, were also there.

After greetings the patrolmen formed a square around the Presidential party to the Brooklyn annex boat, reserved exclusively for it on the trip to the Fulton Street slip. Mr. Roosevelt did not omit to shake hands with the train engineer, C. W. Martin, and the fireman, O. T. Scannell.

Squadron C the Escort.

At the Fulton Street pier Borough Inspector Adam A. Cross received the party, and sharp on 7:30 o'clock the start was made in eight carriages for the clubhouse at Dean Street and Bedford Avenue. Leading was a picked squad of mounted policemen under Roundsman Cullen; then a bicycle detail and Squadron C, commanded by Major C. I. Debevoise, and all smart and soldierly and consummate horsemen. It was its first parade as a squadron.

All along the route vivid interest was manifested in the President and the passage of his carriage was the signal for rounds of cheers, exclamations of approval, and waving of tiny flags and handkerchiefs. At the clubhouse as Mr. Roosevelt went up the steps a crowd of 15,000 cheered long and vociferously.

A larger crowd was as demonstrative when at 9:45 o'clock the President left the club for the unveiling of the Slocum Statue, at Bedford Avenue and the Eastern Parkway. His ride there was a continuous ovation from the thousands that blocked the sidewalks. At the club some comment was made on the absence of Mayor McClellan. He was at the unveiling platform a few minutes before Mr. Roosevelt, and said that as he lives in the country he found it too late when he got to Brooklyn to go to Dean Street. As the President's carriage was turning into the Parkway Mr. McClellan advanced, opened the carriage door, and shook hands with Mr. Roosevelt with every evidence of warm cordiality. The throng that packed the stands appreciated the situation and applauded. After the unveiling exercises the President went to the reviewing stand, staying there until 11:50 A. M., when the Presidential cortège went along the line of the parade to Willoughby Street and then hurried to the Naval Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, in Sands Street.

Police Guards on Roofs.

In this neighborhood Borough Inspector Cross "took no chances," and had scores of policemen on the roofs of the houses in Sands Street and the neighborhood of the navy yard, and cut off Sands Street from regular traffic from Gold to Bridge Street, leaving Miss Gould's institution strongly guarded by a force under Inspector John Wiegand. The President arrived at the Young Men's Christian Association at 12:17 P. M., and at 12:48 o'clock was at the Annex pier at Fulton Street with the Union League Club committee and Police Commissioner McAdoo. The trip to the Pennsylvania station was ended at 1:10 o'clock, the Presidential craft being saluted at every point by all that floated. At 1:18 P. M. the second section of Train 67, the Washington Express, pulled out of the station, the crowd cheering and the President acknowledging approval beamingly from the Courier's rear platform. The President got to Washington at 6:16 o'clock last evening.

On the trip of the Annex boat from Jersey City to Fulton Street it was discovered that an unbidden passenger, a frowsy, sullen fellow, was on board. Detectives were soon around him. It was decided that he was harmless and "happy" through potations, and he was turned loose after the cortège was on its way to the Union League Clubhouse.

SLOCUM STATUE UNVEILED.

President Roosevelt and Mayor McClellan at the Exercises.

President Roosevelt and Mayor McClellan were the stars yesterday at the unveiling of the statue of Major Gen. Henry W. Slocum in the Eastern Parkway, at Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn. They were both cheered to the echo. The President spoke of the old soldier and the courage with which he faced peril in the civil war, and the reunited country that has followed the war. Incidentally he spoke of the war in the Far East as a reminder to the people of this country of the need for a strong navy.

Mayor McClellan preceded the President in the addresses, as he was to accept the statue on behalf of the city. The Mayor also acted as the chief reviewing officer of the parade, the President having to leave early to attend the meeting in the Naval Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. Roosevelt left the reviewing stand after looking over the regulars and the Brooklyn regiments, and before the Grand Army had passed. Escorted by Troop C, he rode past the veterans, standing up in his carriage with uncovered head to do honor to the men of the sixties, with their battle-torn flags. The veterans were not accompanied by the Confederate Camp, the Southerners having withdrawn to avoid ill-feeling.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature of the parade was the working of a new regulation of the National Guard. The crowd of sightseers dubbed it "the rubber-neck salute." When the regulars passed the President the officers gave the usual salute and the men came to port arms. When the militia passed their officers gave the salute, at the same time calling, "Eyes right!" The men kept their guns at right shoulder and stared at the head of the Nation in token of salute.

Hungry after his long ride, the President had breakfast at the Union League Club immediately on his arrival there. He spent an hour over his meal, and then went to the club reception room, where he shook hands with practically all the members and a great many guests in time to start for the unveiling at 9:50 o'clock. The handshaking was at the rate of a little over seventeen per minute, including a kindly smile and hearty grip.

With Troop C, in khaki uniforms, the President was driven to the flag-concealed monument of Gen. Slocum. It was a distance of five blocks up Bedford Avenue, and from the time the carriage passed the statue of Gen. Grant until the President and the Mayor, who had joined Mr. Roosevelt too late for breakfast, took their seats on the platform a battery shook up the neighborhood with the twenty-one guns of the Presidential salute.

Both the Mayor and the President warmly greeted Miss Gertrude Slocum, granddaughter of Gen. Slocum, who was to unveil the monument of the soldier on his charger with sabre uplifted. A band near by played "The Star-Spangled Banner," and those of the big crowd that had been sitting arose.

Mayor and President.

President Roosevelt and Mayor McClellan stood side by side.

When the band had finished Bishop F. Burgess delivered the invocation, a prayer for peace among the nations. Park Commissioner M. J. Kennedy then made the address of presentation of the Slocum statue. He paid a short but warm tribute to Gen. Slocum, referring to him as a valiant commander, a just man, and an exemplary citizen.

Then Miss Slocum drew aside the flag that had hidden the heroic statue of her illustrious grandfather. As the crowd caught sight of the great bronze equestrian figure a mighty cheer went up.

THE MAYOR'S SPEECH.

Mayor McClellan, in accepting the statue for the city, said:

"A patriotic sentiment of a patriotic people has consecrated this day in every year to the memory of those who fought and died for the flag of our reunited country. While the chief purpose of Decoration Day is to do honor to those who by their deeds made possible the greatness of the United States, its chief result is to inculcate a lesson which serves for the guidance of our people throughout all the other days of the year—a lesson of devotion to duty and to country, of self-sacrifice and self-effacement, of American strength and of American manhood.

"It is fitting therefore that this day should have been selected for the dedication of the monument erected to record the life of Henry Warner Slocum. It is fitting that the Chief Magistrate of our country, himself a gallant soldier, should be here to do honor to the memory of a brave brother in arms. It is fitting that the thin blue line of the veterans who fought at Antietam and at Chancellorsville and at Gettysburg should be here to bear testimony by their presence to the devotion of his men to a great commander. But more than all it is fitting that the people of Brooklyn—the citizens of the city he loved—should be here to show not only their admiration and respect for Gen. Slocum, but their love and esteem for their fellow-citizen, Henry W. Slocum.

"Those of us who were born since the civil war know Slocum the soldier only as we have read of him in books, but we loved Slocum the man as we met him in the ordinary affairs of life, a public-spirited citizen, a fearlessly honest man, a kindly and a simple-hearted gentleman. His words at Gettysburg, which will live as long as the memory of that great victory endures, 'Stay and fight it out,' epitomized the whole character of the man. He stayed and fought the good fight to the end, and left the proof of life's victory in the hearts of his neighbors and his friends in Brooklyn.

"He summed up the whole scheme of modern civilization, he voiced the sentiment of every patriotic American, he gave to this people a motto for its guidance in its onward and upward flight, when he said, 'A man can do more good in helping the children to be taught well than in commanding an army.'

"And so in doing honor to Slocum, we are doing honor to the best that is in the American character, to the loftiest purposes, and to the highest ideals of American manhood; we are doing honor to the memory of one who was a great soldier, but who was first of all a great citizen."

"The President of the United States needs no introduction to the American people," said Mr. Kennedy in introducing Mr. Roosevelt. Bowing to the Commissioner, to the Mayor, and to the granddaughter of Gen. Slocum, and then turning to the cheering crowd, the President said:

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

"Mr. Mayor, Mr. Commissioner, and you my fellow-citizens, and above all, you who took part in the great war in which the man whose statue is raised to-day won for himself and his country renown and honor. [Applause.]

"Day before yesterday I listened to a sermon in which the preacher, dwelling upon the exercises to be held throughout the Union to-day, preached on the text which commemorates the altar raised by command of Moses to commemorate the victory gained by the children of Israel over the wild tribes of the desert, who sought to bar their march toward the Promised Land, wherein Amalek came out and Israel fought all day, and while Aaron and Hur upheld the hands of Moses until as night fell the sun went down on the Israelites and they raised an altar to Jehovah, to Jehovah who stood as the exponent of the principle for which Israel warred; they raised it to the principle of righteousness, which alone can justify any war or any struggle. [Applause.] And, Mr. Mayor, that is the thought that you developed in the excellent address to which we have just listened; that we make to-day to commemorate the great victory, the triumph of the cause of Union and liberty; not primarily because it was a victory, but because it was a victory for righteousness and the peace and the liberty and the eternal spiritual welfare of mankind. [Applause.]

"I see before me here men who won high honor serving as comrades in arms of Gen. Slocum, and I know that there exists in the Union no men who will appreciate more the fact that now, forty years after the war, the crowning triumph of what they did is to be found in the fact that we have a genuinely reunited country, a country in which the man who wore the blue stretches out the hand of loyal friendship to his erstwhile foe, his now devoted friend and fellow-countryman, the man who wore the gray. [Applause.]

"A short while ago I passed through the great State of Texas. Wherever I stopped in that great State I was greeted by representatives of the Grand Army marching side by side with or intermingled with men clad in the gray uniform that showed that they had fought in the armies of the Confederacy, men who had tested one another's worth on the stricken fields, men who knew each that the other had been ready when the hour of supreme appeal came to show his worth by his endeavors, and men who now leave to their children and their children's children as a heritage of honor forever the memory of the great deeds done alike by those who fought under Grant and by those who fought under Lee, because of the very fact that the Union triumphed now have the right to feel a like pride in the valor and devotion of those who valiantly fought against the stars in their courses and those who finally saw their efforts, their sufferings crowned by triumph. [Applause.]

No Bitterness Left.

"Think of it, my fellow countrymen! Think of what a thrice blessed fortune has been ours that the greatest war that the nineteenth century saw after the close of the Napoleonic struggles should have left, not as most wars inevitably do and must leave, memories of bitterness, dishonor, and shame to offset the memories of glory, memories which make the men on one side hang their heads, but which have left, not that, but should have left to the victors and vanquished alike, after the temporary soreness is over, the same right to feel the proudest satisfaction in the fact that the Union was saved and the greatest pride in the honor, the gallantry, the devotion to the right as each side had given it, the right to see the right done alike by those who overcame as victors and those who finally went down in defeat. [Applause.]

"I congratulate the people of Brooklyn, not primarily upon raising this statue, because that they ought to do, but upon the opportunity, upon the chance of having it to raise. [Applause.] I congratulate them upon the good fortune of having the fellow-citizen who in war and in peace alike served the people so well as to make it their duty, not so much to him as to themselves, to erect the statue that it might serve as a lesson for the generations to come. [Applause.] And, my fellow citizens, I am sure we all realize the peculiar appropriateness of having the statue of Gen. Slocum received on behalf of the City of New York by its Chief Magistrate, whose father was Gen. Slocum's illustrious colleague. [Applause.]

Gen. Slocum.

"Surely there is need for me to say but little in emphasis of what has been set forth before I began to speak as to the prime significance of Gen. Slocum's career. He was a great soldier a most gallant and able commander. Once the war was over he turned as whole-heartedly to the pursuits of peace as he had during the war turned to the strife of arms. Gen. Slocum was one of those men on whose career we can dwell in its entirety. We do not have to dwell with emphasis on part of it because we don't care to speak of another part. We are able to point to Gen. Slocum as the type of what a decent American citizen should be, as a man who was an example in his family life, an example in his business relations, an honest and upright public servant no less than a fearless and able soldier.

"Now, I want all you people to remember the two sides of the lesson taught by Gen. Slocum's life. A successful war for unrighteousness is the most dreadful of all things; it is the thing that sets back more than aught else the course of civilization. But no people worth preserving ever existed, or will exist, that was not able to fight if the need arose. [Applause.] And so with the individual. The man who possesses great ability and great courage unaccompanied by the moral sense, a courage and ability unguided by the stern purpose to do what is just and upright, that man is rendered by the fact of having the courage and the ability only so much the greater menace to the community in which he unfortunately dwells. [Loud applause.] We cannot afford as a people ever to forget for one moment that ability, far-sightedness, iron resolution, perseverance, willingness to do and dare, are qualities to be admired only if they are put at the service of the right, at the service of decency and of justice. [Applause.] The man who possesses those qualities and does not shape his course by a fundamental and unwavering moral principle is a menace to each and all of us; and thrice foolish, thrice wicked is the other man who condones his moral shortcomings because of his intellectual or physical strength and prowess. [Applause.] That is one side.

What Makes a Man a Man.

"The other side is that no amount of good intention, no amount of sweetness in life, no amount of appreciation of decency avails in the least in the rough work of the world as we find it unless back of the honesty of purpose, back of the decency of life and thought, lies the power that makes a man a man. [Applause.] It is true of the individual, and it is true of the nation. It is to the last degree desirable—I will put it stronger than that—it is absolutely essential that this Nation, if it is to hold the position in the future that it has held in the past, must act not only within but without its own borders in a spirit of justice and of large generosity toward all other peoples. [Applause.] We owe obligations to ourselves, we owe those obligations to all mankind. More and more as we increase in strength I hope to see a corresponding increase in the sober sense of responsibility which shall prevent us either injuring or insulting any other people. You may notice that I said 'insulting' as well as 'injuring.' If there is one quality sometimes shown among us which is not commendable, it is a habit of speaking loosely about foreign powers, foreign races. You do not need any of you to be told that in private life you will resent an insult quite as much as an injury, and our public writers need to steadily keep before their minds the thought that no possible good can come to us by speaking offensively of any one else. [Applause.] And trouble may come.

How to Invite Disaster.

"The surest way for a nation to invite disaster is to be opulent, aggressive, and unarmed. [Laughter and applause.] Now, we are opulent, and I hope we will remain so. I trust that we shall never be aggressive unless aggression is not merely justified, but demanded. [Applause.] Demanded either by our own self-respect or by the interests of mankind; and, finally, remember that to be aggressive, above all to be aggressive in speech and not be armed, invites only merely disaster but the contempt of mankind. [Applause.]

"Brooklyn not only furnished valiant soldiers to the civil war, but it furnished in times of peace a most excellent Secretary of the Navy to the United States. [Pointing to Gen. Tracy upon the platform.] If our navy is good enough, we have a long career of peace before us. [Applause.] And the only likelihood of trouble ever coming to us as a nation will arise if we let our navy become too small or inefficient. [Applause.] A first-class navy, first-class in point of size, above all first-class in point of efficiency of the individual units acting as units and in combination, is the surest and the cheapest guarantee of peace; and I should think that any man looking at what is happening and has happened abroad and in our own history during the past few years must be indeed blind if he cannot read that lesson clearly.

Stern and Mild Virtues.

"And Gen. Slocum did his first great public service when the crisis called not primarily for the softer and milder but for the sterner and harder virtues; and we cannot afford in this day of material luxury, in this day when civilization tends to make life easy—we cannot afford to ignore those hard and stern virtues. In the workday world as it is, not only in war but in private life and in public life alike, a man has to have the strength of fibre or he cannot put into effect even the best of his efforts, and he cannot afford to let the generation that is coming up grow up with the feelings that any quality will serve as a substitute for the old and essential quality of manliness in a man and womanliness in a woman. [Applause.]

"Much, very much, has been done in this country by education. No one can overstate the debt that this country is under to the educators, but in taking advantage of all the improved methods let us not forget that there are certain qualities which are not new, which are eternal because they are eternally true, and the failure to develop which will cause a loss which cannot be offset by any merely intellectual and mental gain. A sound body is a first-class thing, a sound mind is an even better thing, but the thing that counts for most in the individual as in the Nation is character, by [applause,] the sum of those qualities which make a man a good man and a woman a good woman. And you men of the civil war, you men to whom this country owes more than to any others, no matter how great the service of those others may be, because to you this country owes its life, you won the place you did, you won for this country its salvation because you had in you those qualities which in their aggregate we know by the name of character, the qualities which made you to put material gains, material well being not merely below, but insignificant as compared to things that were greater when the crisis called for showing your manhood.

"You went to the war, leaving those behind who could make more money, who could rise in the world, but carrying with you in your hearts the honor and the future of a mighty Nation. You had, in the first place, the right spirit, and then you had the quality of making that spirit evident in the time of need. If you had not had patriotism, devotion to the country and the flag, you could have done nothing. You could not have done much more if your patriotism and your devotion to the flag had not been backed up by a willingness to stay put in battle. [Applause.] You showed in times that tried men's souls what this country has a right to expect from its sons. You had the supreme good fortune of testing your manhood in one of the two great crises of the Nation's history, the great crisis in which the Nation was born in the days of 1776 and the no less great crisis in which the Nation was saved by the men of 1861. [Applause.]

"You have left us not merely a reunited country, but you have left us the glorious heritage of the memory of the exploits, of the qualities, by which the country was left reunited. Our days have fallen for our good fortune, in times of peace. We have not had to show the qualities that you showed in the dark years that closed in the sunburst of Appomattox, but if we are to leave undimmed to our children the heritage that you left to us, we must show in peace, and should the need ever arise in war also, the qualities that you showed, the qualities that make it now the pleasantest of all tasks for a public servant who appreciates the greatness of America, to come on an occasion like this and see the people of a great city dedicate a monument in honor of a great citizen who, at every point of his career, illustrated what the name American should be when it is used in the sense of its highest, its deepest, and its best significance." [Applause.]

Among the many who listened to the addresses and later reviewed the parade were Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, Controller Grout, Police Commissioner McAdoo, Timothy L. Woodruff, Gen. Grant, and ex-Mayor Low.

The parade was itself an unusual feature of the day. It is estimated that 10,000 were in line. A company from the Eighth United States Infantry had the right of line. After the regulars came the four National Guard regiments of Brooklyn, the Third Battery, and the Naval Militiamen, who were followed by the veterans and sons of veterans, taking up five divisions. Then came the letter carriers, volunteer cadets, and the boys' brigade. Daniel Simmons, Jr., was Grand Marshal.

FIGHT TO REACH GRAVES.

Police Curb Women at Cars—Big Day for Queens Cemeteries.

It took the combined efforts of Police Capt. Kemp and fifteen policemen from the Long Island City Station to prevent women from mobbing one another yesterday as the women were boarding trolley cars bound for the various cemeteries. All day long a stream of widows and orphans crossed the Long Island ferries on their way to visit graves of relatives. It is feared that the Long Island Railroad Company disregarded the laws in relation to the crowding of ferryboats by allowing hundreds over the legal number to board each boat.

In Long Island City there was at all times a big string of trolley cars ready to carry those who wanted to visit graves to the cemeteries, but the women mourners were so desirous to get to the graves of relatives or friends in a hurry that they fought with one another to board trolley cars.

Altogether yesterday was the biggest day in the history of the various cemeteries in Queens Borough, where nearly 4,000,000 dead lie buried.

A WORD FOR THE SOUTH AT GRANT'S TOMB

Dr. McConnell Extols the Bravery of Lee and His Men.

GRANT AS A PEACEMAKER

Ceremonies at the Tomb Open with a Salute from the Tacoma's Guns.

Of course Memorial Day was celebrated at the tomb of Gen. Grant. There were cheers and tears for the Blue and the Gray alike there, and the thousands who were gathered at the tomb of the leader heard but one doctrine—that of peace.

The exercises took place at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, when the United States gunboat Tacoma, specially sent to the Hudson for the occasion, fired the National salute of twenty-one guns. As the echo of the last gun died away those gathered before the last resting place of the man in whose honor the ceremonies were held bared their heads and the strain of "America" was taken up by a thousand voices. At the conclusion of the hymn Commander R. F. Britt read the ritual of the Grand Army dedicated to the day. There was prayer by the Rev. Dr. Marcus B. Taylor, Chaplain of the post, and George W. Dickinson read Lincoln's Gettysburg address. The orator of the day, the Rev. Dr. Francis J. McConnell, pastor of the New York Avenue Methodist Church, Brooklyn, was then introduced.

"My text to-day," said the speaker, "was voiced years ago by the man in whose memory we are here—'Let us have peace.' We sometimes underestimate the significance of these words, which were so truly significant of Gen. Grant's life.

"Grant went to war to bring peace. Sometimes the best way to achieve it is to fight for it, for nothing is ever settled until it is settled right. The Union soldiers, when they fought secession, fought for the world's peace."

It was by their skill in the ways of peace, Dr. McConnell said, that the Japanese were sweeping the Russians from land and sea. This declaration evoked the first applause from his hearers.

"The generalship of the civil war," he averred, "and there was generalship on both sides, was simply common sense. Gen. Grant treated war as a business proposition, and in this lay the secret of his success. Abraham Lincoln was immeasurably tender, but he said, 'This job must be put through.' We proved we were a peace loving people by the readiness with which we went back to everyday life when the war was over. And now, having fought for peace, the Union soldier may spend the declining years of his life in working to wipe out all possible bitterness.

"We must make up our minds that the South was just as much convinced of the righteousness of her cause as we were of ours. It is about time we stopped talking of our difference. No braver army ever marched to a battle than the Army of Northern Virginia. No greater commander ever led his men than Robert E. Lee. Gen. Grant recognized the fibre of his foes when, after the surrender, he said: 'Let them take their horses back for the Spring plowing.'

"I don't believe," he said, "that the Confederate flag should be put out of sight. It should be respected as long as men revere personal bravery, the genius of leadership, and the courage that follows conviction, if need be, to the grave."

Capt. J. E. Graybill of the Confederate Veteran Camp of New York followed Dr. McConnell. He indorsed the custom of annually decorating the graves of those who died for their country, and predicted that the day would come when there would be a common day on which would be paid "a National tribute to our country's dead, whether they wore the buff of the Revolution or the blue and gray of the civil war."

He applauded the sentiment expressed by the late President McKinley, that the Federal Government should share with the South in the care of the graves of the Confederate soldiers. "It endeared McKinley to the South as did Grant's memorable expression, 'Let us have peace,'" he declared.

21 GUNS AT McKINLEY SQUARE

Flag Raised Before an Enthusiastic Bronx Throng—Tablet Unveiled.

The Memorial Day observances in the Bronx began promptly at sunrise, when a salute of twenty-one guns heralded the raising of the flag in McKinley Square, One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street and Boston Avenue.

The exercises were under the auspices of the McKinley Square Liberty Pole and Flag Association. Several thousand patriotic citizens responded to the call to participate. As early as 5 o'clock the crowd began to assemble. Later the Second Battery, Major David Wilson commanding, took up a position in Crotona Park, while members of the Sons of Veterans, the Women's Relief Corps of Oliver Tilden Post, G. A. R., and a large delegation of boys from the Mount Morris High School gathered about the little park in which the pole stands. As the sun rose the entire assembly sang, "America." Then the Fifth Signal Corps, under the command of Capt. William J. Champion, gave the signal to fire, and the battery thundered out its salute.

Ex-Senator Joseph P. Hennessy delivered an address in behalf of the association, and unveiled a handsome bronze tablet to the memory of the three martyred Presidents, Lincoln, Garfield, and McKinley.

SERVICES AT DIX GRAVE.

Famous Old War Flag Carried to the Cemetery.

Impressive services were held yesterday afternoon at the grave of Gen. Dix in Trinity Cemetery, One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, by the members of John A. Dix Post No. 135, G. A. R.

After participating in the parade of the morning the post under command of George E. Dewey boarded the steamer Albertina and proceeded up the Hudson to One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street, where they landed and marched to the cemetery. They carried with them as they did during the parade the famous flag which floated over the revenue cutter McClellan at New Orleans in January, 1861, when Gen. Dix, then Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, sent the dispatch in which he said: "If any one attempts to haul down the American flag, shoot him on the spot."

Men's Serge Suits to Order

The man who did not have his new serge suit yesterday fully realized that it is high time it was provided for. We are particularly well prepared to make you a handsome, serviceable blue or black serge suit that you will be proud to wear, and comfortable in the wearing.

Our serges are selected with particular care. The fact that we make right every suit that goes wrong means that we protect ourselves well in buying only materials that have stood the severest tests, both as to their being absolutely pure worsted, and positively fast in color. Every fabric is thoroughly shrunken before we cut it. The tailoring is carefully done. The suits, although lined in the lightest way possible, are tailored to hold their shape and to give two seasons' wear at least.

Men's single or double-breasted Sack Coat Suits, of either blue or black serge, made to order for $25, $30 and $35.

Men's Tailoring, Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Radical Stock-Righting In WOMEN'S DRESSES

We want the last day of May to practically clean up our stock of Women's Spring Suits; and although women will want to buy these dresses for at least a month to come, we want to lighten our stocks very materially before the First of June.

For this reason we have taken the beautiful and stylish suits of the very latest patterns—excepting only the very thin Summer dresses—and made radical reductions on all the prices.

They are dresses that will be worn on cool days and in the evenings, as well as at mountain and seashore all Summer and in the early Fall. Some of the best offerings of the season are included. The groups are as follows:

$21 to $25 Suits, now $15

Made of homespun mixtures and stripes, with three-quarter length tourist coats; fly-front; some with embroidered linen collar and cuffs. Skirts are in plaited styles.

$27.50 to $30 Suits, now $20

Of checked canvas and striped suitings, in light shades. Three-quarter length, tight-fitting coats; some with linen collar and cuffs. Others in plain tailored styles. Skirts gored and plaited.

$37.50 to $42 Suits, now $27.50

Of Panama cloth, broadcloth, drap d'ete, eoliennes and checked suitings, in Eton, blouse and jacket styles. Skirts are in various gored and plaited effects.

In our regular stocks we are showing beautiful Summer Suits, of lustrous, light-weight mohairs, in Eton, blouse and three-quarter length, tight-fitting and fly-front jacket styles. Some are trimmed with braid; others have linen collars and cuffs. Skirts are gored and plaited. Prices, $18.50 to $37.50. Second floor, Broadway.

HEAR THE PRESIDENT

Uproariously Cheer Speech for Strong Navy at Y. M. C. A.

PEACE GUARANTEE, HE SAYS

"First-Class Target Practice a Positive Provocative of Peace"—Our Naval Warriors' "Fighting Edge."

With lusty cheers several hundred jackies from the United States Navy Yard gave President Roosevelt a rousing welcome yesterday afternoon at the Naval Young Men's Christian Association, in Sands Street, Brooklyn. Miss Helen Miller Gould, upon whose invitation the President went there, was on hand to receive him, and with her were many prominent civilians. Gayly decorated with dozens of flags, the Y. M. C. A. building presented a gala appearance. Inside a band kept things lively.

An hour before President Roosevelt was due the place was crowded with the eager sailors and marines. With their hats in their hands they waited patiently, ready to stand on their feet all day if necessary.

When at last the sounds of marching cavalry were heard a cheer went up. The noise of the hoofs got louder and louder, Squadron C clattered by, the President's carriage drew up before the door, and the President entered. Immediately there went up a roar of welcome. The sailors on the ground floor went wild with enthusiasm and sent up cheer after cheer. Of course the President took off his hat and bowed; this mark of courtesy was received by the navy men as if it were entirely new and had been invented exclusively for their benefit.

The President did not go to the stand at once and begin his talk. He turned aside into the little reception room to shake hands with Miss Gould and the others on the Reception Committee. Some of those on the committee were St. Clair McKelway, John J. McCook, ex-Mayors Charles A. Schieren and David A. Boody of Brooklyn, ex-Mayor Seth Low, Civil Service Commissioner R. Ross Appleton, ex-Judge Roger A. Pryor, Starr J. Murphy, Gen. Frederick D. Grant, Read Admiral Sigsbee, Rear Admiral Coghlan, and the Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, pastor emeritus of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church and the oldest pastor in Brooklyn.

After a handshake all arcund President Roosevelt went up in the elevator, passed through and inspected several of the Y. M. C. A.'s rooms, and then appeared at the top of the broad flight of steps.

"Hurrah!" shouted some enthusiastic jacky, and then everybody cheered. Accompanied by his Secret Service bodyguard and some of the committee, President Roosevelt went down the steps. The crowd kept quiet, as they thought he was about to begin his speech. Again they were disappointed, for the President started toward the elevator a second time.

"I am going to see where you shoot!" he shouted out to the jackies, who, of course, let loose another yell. Then the President went down stairs to the shooting gallery. In a minute or two he had returned, and was on the improvised speaking stand in the centre of the big hall. As soon as the yells ceased he began to speak.

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

"Officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy," he said, "and you, friends of the navy—for good Americans can be nothing else—I made up my mind, though many invitations were extended to me in addition to the one which brought me to Brooklyn, that I could not refuse the invitation to come to this building and meet you. I don't have to tell you that I believe with all my might in the navy of the United States. I believe in that which counts most in the navy—the officers and enlisted men—the man behind the gun, the man in the conning tower, the man—"

"The man with the slice bar!" yelled out some jacky in the rear of the hall, not wishing the President to forget the men who feed the fires. At this interruption everybody laughed, and President Roosevelt seemed more amused than any one else.

"Yes," he continued, bowing assent to the interruption, "the man, wherever he is, who is doing his duty. We owe a peculiar debt of gratitude to those who have led in securing this building. The people of the United States should make it their peculiar duty to see to the welfare, moral more than physical, of the men upon whose exertions, upon whose skill, upon whose character in a crisis the honor of the Nation depends.

"All respect is due to those, especially to Miss Gould, [loud cheers,] who have erected this building, who have given expression to the spirit that lies behind everything of this nature. We have passed that period when it was thought that if a man was too decent he couldn't fight. [Laughter.] I have a good deal of experience in civil affairs, and I have never yet found a job to which, other things being equal, I would not prefer to appoint a man who had seen service in the army or navy, because he has learned certain things which double or treble his value in whatever position he may be placed.

"Not only do we owe it to this man in the navy to see that he has every chance to lead a wholesome and manly life, but we owe it to ourselves, to the Nation of which we are a part, to see that this man's capacities for good are given the fullest chance for development.

"As much as I believe in the Y. M. C. A. and other kindred organizations, I believe in them most when they take such shape as this. And now a special word to you—you upon whom so heavy a responsibility rests.

"It depends upon the way in which you do your duty in peace whether or not, should ever occasion for war arise, our flag will receive credit or discredit at your hands or at the hands of your successors. I cannot too often say to civilians what every naval man knows—that in battle those who win are those who have prepared for battle beforehand.

"I see here men who fought with Dewey at Manila and off Santiago. At both places we won—we won hands down." This lapse into the vernacular brought a volley of cheers and laughs from the jackies. Smiling at the outburst, President Roosevelt continued:

"We won because the shots that hit were the shots that counted, because the men on our ships knew how to handle them singly and in squadrons, knew how to get the best out of them, and because they knew how to do decent shooting. Notice, I don't say first-class shooting. [Laughter.] Most of you do much better shooting now. I'd be ashamed if you didn't do better than you did then. There is nothing that should give a patriotic American better right to satisfaction than the way the target practice on American ships has improved. Now I can fairly say that there are certain gun crews that have reached as high a mark of excellence as can possibly be reached. I said gun crews, you'll notice. You might have all the individual shots you could gather and they would not be worth a rap unless you got together, if you do not act so as to subordinate in the mind of each man his own individuality to the success for which you all exist.

"More and more are our people waking up to the need of a navy. In view of events that are happening all over the world [cheers and laughter], I think we can count on it that Congress will continue to build up our navy—they certainly will, if I can persuade them to do it."

This promise brought another call for "Three cheers!"

The Fighting Edge.

"It is all important that our ships be best in hull, best in armor, best in armament of any nation in the world. Sometime I may be able to say something about the character of you men to whom I am speaking and of your comrades. You can do nothing without proper training, but the training won't do much unless you have the right stuff in you. I believe in the navy of the United States primarily because I believe in the intelligence, the patriotism, the fighting edge of the average man in that navy. It often needs a tragedy to bring out the qualities that are in a man.

"You remember that dreadful accident that happened aboard the battleship Missouri about a year ago? Terrible as it was, there were things connected with it that should make all Americans feel a sense of proud confidence in the officers and enlisted men to whom Uncle Sam confides his honor.

"When that accident occurred in the turret there were twenty minutes when every man knew the ship might sink at any moment. Yet there wasn't a trace of nervousness—no sign of any one's being rattled. Every man went to his quarters and waited there till he was ordered to move. They showed qualities which, I think, should make us reasonably confident that they would be able to shoot the quick-firing guns straight at torpedo boats, that the greater the punishment they suffered the straighter they'd shoot back. In other words, they had the coolness and the fighting edge.

"At that time, when the crew of the Missouri was behaving that way, it was the turn of the Texas to go out for target practice. First she sent boats to the Missouri to see if any aid was needed, and found that none was needed. The men on the Texas knew that the accident had occurred during the practice with the big guns. Yet they went out to practice, and made a better record than had been made by any American ship up to that time.

Good Navy—No More War.

"That made me feel confident in the men of the navy. I think that too much cannot be said to impress upon the people the all-importance of the work you are doing. Even if you yourselves never go into battle you create the spirit which enables others who come after you on the ships to do their duty in battle. In time of peace we must make ready for war. I don't think we'll have any more wars if we have a good enough navy. [Laughter.]

"I can appeal to any peace society for support on the ground that every first-class target practice is a positive provocative of peace."

This thought seemed to tickle the President immensely, and he could hardly get the words out of his mouth for laughing. The frock-coated men and the women in the gallery laughed and clapped their hands, and the jackies in the hall howled with delight. Concluding, the President said:

"I speak to you who do more than any others for peace—do most, mind you, not talk most. [Cheers.] You are doing it, and you will continue to do it, by fitting yourselves for war, so that you'll be ready for it when it comes."

Almost before the last sentence was out of his mouth the President was down from the stand, out of the door, and gone. By the time the jackies had wiped the palms of their hands on their blue trousers and were ready to shake hands the sound of the carriage wheels was dying away toward the south. Having a close schedule and being a little late, anyway, the President did not have a minute to spare. Any jackies that were disappointed at missing the handshakes, though, had compensation when an officer of the Young Men's Christian Association got up and announced "refreshments." The men piled pell-mell into the reception room, and Miss Gould was there to meet them. They got their handshaking, after all, and were well satisfied, because to the men of the Brooklyn Navy Yard the name of Miss Helen Gould is as dear as is that of the President of the United States.

Among those present were W. G. Low, J. V. Meserole, Charles E. Teale, Prof. J. E. Hasbrouck, Mrs. A. B. Potter, William McCarroll, S. D. Scudder, Francis H. Stuart, Samuel Rowland, Edwin Packard, H. W. Bookstaver, Andrew D. Baird, J. A. Mollenhauer, Charles A. Gardiner, and Thomas Potts.

SPEAKER OF COMMONS OUT.

Mr. Gully, in Ill-Health, Resigns After Ten Years' Service.

LONDON, May 30.—The Speaker of the House of Commons, the Right Hon. William Court Gully, has resigned. He has been ill for some time.

It is probable that the Right Hon. James William Lowther, Deputy Speaker, will be his successor.

Mr. Gully, Member of Parliament (Liberal) for Carlisle, was born in London in 1835, and was elected Speaker of the House of Commons in April, 1895, and again in 1900.

LINER AND SCHOONER CRASH.

No One Hurt When the Lucia and Eagle Wing Meet.

The Austrian steamship Lucia, which arrived yesterday from Mediterranean ports, reported being in collision at 6:30 o'clock Monday evening, in a dense fog, with the big four-masted schooner Eagle Wing, bound down the coast from Boston, about sixty miles south-southeast from the Sandy Hook Lightship.

The Eagle Wing struck the Lucia a glancing blow on the port bow, but signaled before she disappeared in the mist that none of her people was hurt and that all her damage was above the water line. The Lucia's officers say that the schooner was going very fast under full sail, while they were at reduced speed. There was some smashing of gear on both vessels, the Lucia losing her forward derrick and having her engine room telegraph put out of service, while the schooner's jibboom was carried away.

PASSENGER STEAMER ASHORE.

All Aboard the Pro Patria Landed Safely on Cape Breton.

FORCHU, C. B., May 30.—The French steamer Pro Patria is ashore off this port in a dangerous position, with her holds full of water. The passengers and crew have been landed safely.

The Pro Patria, which was bound from St. Pierre, Miquelon, for Halifax with mail and passengers and a small cargo, lost her bearings yesterday during a dense fog and ran out of her course twenty-five miles. The fog continued during the evening, and when off Bear Cove, a mile from this village, the vessel struck bottom. A moderate sea was running, and a hole was knocked in the hull of the steamer.

In a quarter of an hour the lifeboats lay alongside, and the crew and passengers abandoned the ship and started for the shore. It is regarded as practically certain that the vessel will be a total loss.

The Pro Patria, which is owned in St. Pierre and runs on a regular route between that port and Halifax, registers 380 tons net, and was built at Kingshorn, Scotland, in 1893. She is 185 feet long, 27 feet wide, and 19 feet deep.

KEPT A PROMISE TO DIE.

He Told Friends They Could Decorate His Grave, Then Ended Life.

When George Middendorf, forty-three years old, of 15 Sixteenth Street, College Point, Queens, told some friends yesterday that he would give them an opportunity to decorate his grave next year they thought he was joking.

"I mean it," said Middendorf earnestly; "I'll give you a chance sure enough. Then you can show what you think of me by putting flowers on my grave."

It was a great shock to the friends when they learned last night that Middendorf had hanged himself in the cellar of his home.

Saved from Drowning, Locked Up.

A water-soaked and bedraggled pair, who said they were John Ashley, fifty-two, a decorator, and his wife, Elizabeth, thirty-four, living at 173 Duffield Street, Brooklyn, were locked up in the Canarsie Police Station yesterday afternoon on charges of intoxication, after they had been saved from drowning in Jamaica Bay by a yachting party. Their rowboat capsized near Yellow Bar. Neither could swim.

OLD FLAGS HELD ALOFT BY YOUNGER HANDS

Special Color Bearers for Veterans' Thinning Line.

A SAD FEATURE OF PARADE

Notable Depletion of Grand Army's Members Marks Manhattan's Memorial Day Procession.

In yesterday's parade of the veterans of the civil war there were many features which pointed sadly to the fact that the time for the last Grand Army parade is drawing near. Many a post that used to muster its hundreds yesterday could count its members by tens only. The estimated number of men in the parade was about 10,000, but of that number not more than one-fifth were veterans of the civil war. They were formed into four instead of five divisions, lest the thinness of their ranks become too conspicuous.

In many cases the heavy flags and post banners were carried by young men, members of the Sons of Veterans, assigned by the authorities for the purpose, and the standard bearers were walking besides them as guards of honor, the burden having grown too heavy for them.

But in one of its features the parade bore striking resemblance to similar events of earlier years. Then, when the veterans were able to muster nearly 100,000 men in this city, their ranks were still further swelled by boys who trotted along holding to their fathers' hands. The little ones were present in the parade yesterday, just as in the old days, but they were now grandchildren, and even great-grandchildren, instead of children of the second generation. The latter were found in the ranks of the militia and the camps of the Sons of Veterans, or on the reviewing stand.

The parade formed on Central Park West facing east, and the head of the column started from the Columbus Monument, where Grand Marshal Joseph B. Lord had established his headquarters for the day. The start was made about 9 o'clock, with a squad of mounted police at the head. These were followed by the Grand Marshal and his staff mounted. As a special guard of honor a company of the Eighth United States Infantry, a marine battalion, and four companies of bluejackets from the battleship Alabama and a squad of sailors from the cruiser Tacoma marched in the line.

Every militia organization in the city was represented in the parade. They were led by Major Gen. Charles F. Roe. The smartest picture was presented by Squadron A, with its bright hussar uniforms. The best showing among the infantry organizations probably was made by the Seventh Regiment, but the best marchers were found in the First Battalion of the Naval Militia, who were greeted with volleys of applause.

The most pathetic sight of the whole parade, perhaps, was presented by the little troup of Veteran Zouaves, composed of about fifty white-haired members of the Veteran Zouave Association and the Veteran Association of the Second Duryea Zouaves, which were assigned the place of honor immediately behind the colors of the Grand Marshal and the headquarters.

A woman wearing the badge of the Zouaves and the Grand Army limped along with this detachment of veterans also. She was Mrs. K. L. Brownell, wife of one of the veterans, and she claims the distinction of being the only woman who ever enlisted in the Army of the United States. She joined the First Rhode Island Militia with her husband, and was wounded in the right leg at the first battle of Bull Run.

The rear of the parade was made up of foreign military bodies and cadet companies. Several of the latter made an excellent showing. The reviewing stand was on the Riverside Drive, at the foot of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument. The reviewing officers was Lieut. Gov. Bruce, who was escorted to the grand stand by the Old Guard. In front of the stand a guard of honor was formed by the Veteran Corps of Artillery under the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix as commander, and the Washington Continental Guards. It took the parade nearly two hours to pass the stand.

The Hebrew Benevolent and Orphan Asylum Band, which has been playing in the parks for the last three weeks, was in the parade and made a hit. No sooner had it reached its post, followed by the cadets, than a crowd gathered around and called for tunes. After the first piece the crowd cried for more, and thus the band was kept busy for half an hour.

LEAPS UPON RUNAWAY.

Mounted Bluecoat Stops Horse After Long Run—Woman Rider Thrown.

Miss Gertrude Russell of 244 West One Hundred and Ninth Street was thrown from a horse at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Riverside Drive yesterday afternoon while the crowds were thickest and the carriages most numerous about Grant's Tomb. She struck on her head and shoulder on a grass plot, and was little injured. Her mount had bolted, and his plunges parted the girth, the saddle slipping to the ground as soon as Miss Russell had been tossed to the turf.

Mounted Policeman McDonald gave chase to the runaway. He had to be exceedingly careful, as the runaway bolted through the press of carriages. The chase continued to Ninety-second Street, where McDonald, having dropped his reins, and placed both hands on the pommel of his saddle, vaulted lightly upon the back of the runaway. His own horse slowed up, as he had been trained to do.

Gripping the sides of the runaway with his knees, McDonald pulled at the bridle until the animal gave up the struggle.

Back a mile and a half, a physician, whose name was not learned, attended to Miss Russell. She was sent home in a cab, suffering from nothing worse than shock and a scratch on her forehead.

DURHAM, FALLEN BOSS, IS ENTIRELY DESERTED

His Followers Flock to the Vares While He Sits Alone.

HIS SURRENDER COMPLETE

Injunction Proceedings Against Potter and Acker to be Withdrawn—Republican Party to Reorganize.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 30.—Representing ex-Directors Costello and Smyth, Francis Shunk Brown and Alexander Simpson, Jr., their attorneys, this afternoon notified James Gay Gordon, counsel for Mayor Weaver, that the injunction proceedings against Directors Potter and Acker will be withdrawn when they are called for argument in Judge Ralston's court to-morrow.

This is the final surrender of the Durham organization to the Mayor. It is the natural sequence to Durham's statement issued yesterday afternoon advising his friends to vote for the confirmation of the names of Messrs. Potter and Acker when they are presented to Select Council by the Mayor next Thursday.

Judge Ralston undoubtedly will allow the quashing of the case. It is likely that he will merely order that the withdrawal of the case be entered on the record of his court, and that will wind up the business begun in such a sensational fashion last Wednesday, when under the injunction Costello and Smyth ousted Potter and Acker and were themselves ejected by the Mayor.

Bereft of his supporters and left to try to repair his shattered political fortunes as best he might, Israel W. Durham spent to-day alone in the office of Senator Penrose. Although his followers until yesterday have all flocked to the banner of the new lights in the political world, the Vare Brothers, some of his personal friends declared this morning that he was not yet out of the fight. They believe he will strive to regain some of the power that was swept from him so suddenly by his announcement that he was ready to support the Mayor's new Directors yesterday afternoon.

DURHAM SAT DESERTED.

He was a strange Durham who sat in the suite of Penrose in the Arcade Building this morning. He denied himself absolutely to newspaper men, and he had no other callers. The anteroom was empty of the usual crowd of ward politicians seeking an audience with the once all-powerful leader. He sat in solitude in the Senator's office and brooded over his change in fortunes. Even Penrose was not there. He had gone to Washington on the 10 o'clock train.

Over at the Betz Building the politicians stood at the entrance by the score. They were waiting for the Vares. When the brothers appeared they were surrounded at once just as Durham was until yesterday.

It is suggested in some quarters, but not generally credited, that Durham is playing a deep game, and that his old followers are still true to him. If this be so they did not show much evidence of it today, because they failed to even lend him the comfort of their presence in his loneliness at Penrose's office.

The most powerful factors now in the Republican Party—no longer "the organization"—are the Vare Brothers, State Senator George A. and Recorder of Deeds William; David H. Lane and David Martin. They plan to rally around them all the shattered forces of Durham and to perfect a combination which will be run along the lines of representative politics—that is, every ward leader will have a voice in the direction of its affairs and a right to be heard.

TO SUPPRESS McNICHOL.

With all the power they can command these men mean to force State Senator James P. McNichol back into a mere ward leader. He will no longer be one of the "big" leaders. Of course he will continue to control the Tenth and Sixth Wards, but his "sphere of influence" outside will be limited as much as possible by the new leaders.

It is believed one of the first things the party will do will be to take off the county ticket to be voted for next Fall, the name of Harry C. Ransley, the nominee for Sheriff. Already all the reformers and independents in the city are planning to defeat him, because as the President of Select Council he lent his efforts to the passage of the gas lease ordinance in that body.

Ransley is the leader of the Second Ward and a follower of the Vares, but it is expected that they will ask him to withdraw so that the chances of the success of an independent movement will be lessened as much as possible.

Politicians admit that the collapse of Durham's organization will reach further in its effects than might be supposed at first glance. It may mean the disintegration of the State organization, which it took the lifetime of Senator Quay and half the lifetime of Simon Cameron to build up and perfect.

Probably it will mean that a new leader will arise to take the place of United States Senator Penrose, Quay's legatee. Throughout the State dissatisfaction is rife, and the downfall of Durham will do much to weaken Penrose.

Thursday's session of Councils will probably mark a new order of affairs in these bodies. Since Durham has been the leader few members ever thought of discussing a measure on the floor, and for all the good they did the other members might have left the making of laws for the city entirely to Select Councilman Charles Seger and Common Councilman John Hammond of the Seventh Ward, the organization "whips." The new order of things may mean the passing of these men.

Director Potter of the Department of Public Safety is expected to issue orders to the police to-morrow outlining his policy. He will tell them that under pain of summary dismissal they shall not countenance the old style of politics in their districts; nor shall they regard the orders of any ward leader as paramount to the orders of their superiors on the force.

Director Acker will inaugurate a business policy in the Department of Public Works, the foundation of which will be "fair play" in the award of municipal contracts.

JOHN MITCHELL SANGUINE.

Expects No Trouble in Coal Regions—Seeks New Agreements.

President John Mitchell of the United Mine Workers has reached this city, and was at the Ashland House yesterday. Though the agreements with the coal companies at Wilkesbarre and through the anthracite regions generally do not expire until next year, it is known that his chief mission here is to see representatives of the coal-carrying companies in reference to future agreements.

"It is too soon to talk of agreements," he said. "It will be a good while before the present agreements expire. I can say this, however: There is absolutely no trouble of any kind at present among the anthracite miners. Everything is going along harmoniously, and I see no reason at present to anticipate any trouble."

Kaiser Closes the Reichstag.

BERLIN, May 30.—Emperor William closed the Reichstag to-day, Vice Chancellor von Posadowsky-Wehner reading the imperial communication to that effect. All the Socialist members left the House as usual, thus showing their disregard for the Crown. All business of importance had been disposed of, and the House probably will not be called together again until October.

KING ALFONSO IN PARIS.

Young Spanish Monarch Cordially Greeted by the People.

PARIS, May 30.—The royal train bringing King Alfonso of Spain for a week's visit arrived at the Porte Dauphine station at 3 o'clock this afternoon. President Loubet, accompanied by the Cabinet, greeted the King as he descended, while batteries of artillery thundered a royal salute of 101 guns.

A large force of troops rendered military honors and the vast assemblage gave an enthusiastic greeting to the young monarch, who was dressed in the full uniform of a Spanish Captain General. He entered a State coach with M. Loubet, and was escorted by a regiment of cuirassiers to the d'Orsay Palace, where sumptuous apartments had been prepared for him.

The drive through the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne and the Champs Elysées presented a brilliant spectacle. Double lines of troops were stretched from end to end of the avenues holding back the cheering crowds. The King acknowledged the ovation by waving his hand in a boyish manner. Everywhere the street decorations were strikingly beautiful, with red and yellow flowers and flags symbolizing the colors of Spain.

A slight incident occurred in the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne, when an individual shouted "Long live anarchy!" A squad of police immediately pounced on the man and carried him off.

Later the King exchanged visits with President Loubet. To-night M. Loubet gave a gala dinner at the Elysée Palace in honor of the royal visitor, at which cordial toasts were exchanged.

For the moment the officials here are absorbed in the visit of King Alfonso, which affects French policy in Morocco, and therefore is of more immediate concern to France than Russia's dilemma.

CANADIAN WATERWAY DISPUTE

We've Spent Millions in Dominion Waters, Says Official.

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, May 30.—Assistant Secretary Loomis of the American State Department has communicated, through Thomas Cote to James P. Mabee, Chairman of Canadian section of International Waterways Commission, the information that the department will probably concede to the Canadian Commissioners the wider interpretation of the act of Congress defining scope of inquiry, so that all waterway matters in dispute will be discussed. President Roosevelt also informed Mr. Mabee in Washington that it was his desire that this should be agreed to.

While in Washington Mr. Mabee looked over some of the maps prepared by the United States showing some parts of the boundary. In the Detroit River, he said, the maps showed the American boundary at places nearly 400 feet in Canadian territory, and in one place within 50 feet of Canadian shore. Within those Canadian waters the American Government had spent millions of dollars in public works, he said.

LAUDS OUR PATRIOTISM.

Sir George White Cites Americans as Examples to British.

LONDON, May 30.—The text of a speech delivered by Sir George Stewart White, Governor of Gibraltar, at Gibraltar on Empire Day (May 24th, the anniversary of the birth of Queen Victoria,) has just reached London. Sir George based his speech on a recent address by Mr. Choate on the subject of patriotism.

The Governor said that England was sadly lacking in education in regard to patriotism compared with the United States, where a vast and increasing population enjoyed the blessings of peace and unequaled wealth, which meant the sinews of war, and where statesmen, headed by the far-seeing President Roosevelt, neglected no opportunity of educating the children of the Nation to honor the flag above all else.

Sir George said that England's omission in this essential was a notable blot and fraught with dangerous potentialities.

MRS. POTTER'S DENIAL.

No Truth in Statement That Lawyer Lent Her Money, She Says.

LONDON, May 30.—Counsel representing Mrs. James Brown Potter sent a letter to the newspapers to-day, saying there is no truth whatever in the statement that Alfred Fossick had lent her any money.

Fossick is a lawyer of Maidenhead, Berkshire, who is charged with misappropriating $60,000, and who, according to a statement made in court yesterday by counsel for the plaintiff in the case, informed plaintiff's counsel that he had lent the money to Mrs. Potter.

Counsel for the actress says she had no knowledge of any of the circumstances connected with the charge against Fossick until a few days before his arrest.

COLOR LINE AGAINST WHITES.

Hawaiian Governor Says Legislature Draws It—Denial of Legislators.

HONOLULU, May 30.—Gov. Carter, in a message vetoing portions of the appropriation bill, has called attention to the fact that in a majority of instances the salaries of white employes of the Government of the Territory were reduced, while the salaries of the Hawaiian employes were increased.

The House, before the final adjournment of the Legislature, unanimously passed a resolution regretting that the Governor had accused the Legislature of drawing the color line, and declaring that it had not done so.

ARCTIC SHIPS AT TROMSOE.

Orleans and Fiala-Ziegler Relief Expeditions Reach the Norwegian Port.

TROMSOE, Norway, May 30.—The arctic steamer Terra Nova arrived here today from London, and will proceed next week to the relief of the Fiala-Ziegler expedition on the America, which is supposed to be at Franz Josef Land.

The members of the Duke of Orleans expedition arrived here last night. His steamer, the Belgica, is coaling, preparatory to sailing for the Island of Novaya Zemlya, where she will take on board sledge dogs, &c.

Senor Garcia Merou Dies in Berlin.

BERLIN, May 30.—Señor Garcia Merou, the Argentine Minister to Germany, died of heart disease to-day. He was transferred here from Washington at the beginning of the year, and became so ill immediately after reaching Berlin that he was unable to present his credentials to the Emperor.

CATSKILL THEATRE PANIC.

Smoke Stampedes Audience at G. A. R. Memorial Exercises.

CATSKILL, N. Y., May 30.—Smoke from some burning paper in a coal hod standing in the entrance to the gallery of the Nelida Theatre here to-night started a panic in the audience of over one thousand, gathered to hear the memorial exercises of Watson Post, G. A. R.

A moment after Pastor Knapp arose to read Lincoln's address at Gettysburg the entire gallery was on its feet in a mad rush for the one exit, and this stampede started a scene of wild excitement throughout the auditorium.

Women fainted in the rush on the gallery stairs, but no one was seriously hurt, and quiet was restored, although several hundred persons left the theatre.

You get the most for your money when you buy men's clothes at Brill's stores.

United States True Blue Serge Suits at $13.50 prove it.

Last year when serges cost much less, we could not supply the demand for these suits.

This year, although they cost us 20% more, we give you the same goods at the old price, $13.50, and there is a quarter of a yard more material to every suit, because the 1905 models are fuller and the coats are longer than last year. Another item is the imported material we use now for vest, sleeve and trouser linings. Its cost is double last year's trimming.

Consequently when you buy a suit of United States True Blue Serge you buy the greatest serge suit in America under $20.

Exclusively in Brill stores at $13.50

MAY

CONEY ISLAND CROWD HUGE, HAPPY, ORDERLY

Few Arrests, Few Accidents, and Lots of Harmless Fun.

HUGGING BEAR IN TROUBLE

Discouraged by a Man with a Pitchfork Who Rescued Mme. Louise—Car Window Jumpers Arrested.

Coney Island observed Decoration Day with a record-breaking crowd, quiet, orderly, but out for fun, nevertheless. It was estimated that 250,000 persons were at the city's playgrounds at one time yesterday afternoon, and last night the crowd did not seem to diminish very rapidly. While the railways and trolley lines seemed to be taking them away by the thousands, incoming specials brought more.

Among the visitors was James Hazen Hyde of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, who was the guest of John Helns, President of the Coney Island and Brooklyn Railroad, and who with a party of friends dined with exSenator Reynolds at Dreamland. Ex-Lieut. Gov. Woodruff and Mrs. Woodruff were at the Boer War Spectacle, at Brighton Beach, while a rumor that President Roosevelt was also there set the press agents of rival shows wild to lay things at his feet. But the President was on his way back to Washington.

The police of Coney Island say that, although yesterday's crowd was very large, arrests were surprisingly few. Accidents also were infrequent. Andrew Curello, a driver for a brewer's wagon, was run down with his horse and team on the Seabeach crossing at West Sixth Street by a Brooklyn Rapid Transit express. The wagon was smashed and the horses slightly bruised, but Curello escaped with a shock. He was sent home.

Among the minor accidents of the day were two recorded by the press agents of Luna Park and the Boer War. At the former place Mme. Louise, who does an act with seventeen trained bears—count them, seventeen!—had trouble with one of them, and was only rescued from the clutches of the infuriated animal by a brave employe who, seizing a pitchfork, dashed into the cage and at the risk of his own life rescued Mme. Louise from the rending claws.

At the Boer War, Hiram Shaw, one of the "Irish Brigade" in the Colenso fight, was thrown and one of his ankles broken. He was attended at the hospital tent on the field of "battle."

So great was the crowd bound for Coney that the police of the Bridge squad were kept busy yesterday preventing eager persons from jumping through the windows of trains in the Manhattan terminal. Four arrests were made for this cause, and the offenders were lodged in cells at the Oak Street Station charged with disorderly conduct.

Philadelphia Ahead in Chess Match.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 30.—The annual chess match on fifteen boards was played at the Franklin Chess Club here this afternoon and evening between the Franklin Club and the Manhattan Chess Club. The match stood slightly in favor of the local team, and when play was given up for the day the Franklin men had won seven points to six. A. K. Robinson, Pillsbury, Reichhelm, Roeske, and M. Lotkowski won for the home team, while Koehler, Halpern, Devisser, Roething, and Raubitsch won for the Manhattans.

SHIP'S FLIGHT FROM BRAZIL.

Sealer Marvin Went Aground, but Eluded Vessel Pursuing Her.

HALIFAX, N. S., May 30.—The schooner C. B. Marvin of the South American fishing fleet has arrived here after an eventful trip, which, according to her Captain's story, involved a sensational flight from the Port of Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil.

The schooner, which is owned in this city, belongs to the same fleet as the sealer Agnes Donohue, now being held by the authorities at Montevideo as the result of alleged illegal seal killing by her crew. The Marvin called at Rio Grande do Sul to land her fare of 2,350 sealskins for shipment to London. Her Captain states that the authorities at the port sealed the schooner's hatches upon her arrival.

After waiting eight days for further action he decided to leave. He cleared at the Custom House, but when he endeavored to secure the pilot he says he was informed that he could not leave until he received permission from the authorities. He then set sail and left the harbor without a pilot. A vessel gave chase.

The schooner stranded on a bar at the mouth of the harbor, but floated in time to evade her pursuer, and made the remainder of her voyage to this port without further incident.

MID SOUNDS OF REVELRY.

Firemen in Dress Suits Put Out a Fire, Then Go on with Dance.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., May 30.—The members of the Hook and Ladder and Hose Company entertained their friends in the firehouse parlors last night. While the dancing was at its height the fire bell rang. The volunteers, wearing swallow-tail coats and dancing pumps, manned the separate apparatus and responded to the alarm, which was caused by a fire in a barn at the home of Edward G. Burgess.

The firemen succeded in saving four horses, but the barn was badly damaged. After the fire was out the firemen returned to the dance, and kept it going until morning.

TO TEST WARSHIPS' COLORS.

Joint Manoeuvres to Compare Usefulness of Different Shades.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 30.—One of the tests during the coming joint manoeuvres will deal with the value of warpaint as compared with the regular coatings for war vessels.

With this test in view the monitors Nevada, Arkansas, and Florida, now at the Naval Academy, have been painted the lead color used on vessels during hostilities. The other vessels of the fleet will retain their present colors.

PREDICTS COTTON FAMINE.

Supply Won't Equal Season's Demand, Says ex-Gov. Longino.

Special to The New York Times.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 30.—Ex-Gov. Longino of Mississippi, who is regarded as one of the ablest and most conservative observers of cotton affairs, predicts that the present season will show the greatest cotton famine in history, and that the cotton belt will be unable to supply the demand.

Gov. Longino makes this prediction after finishing a trip through his State inspecting the crop.

FIGHT IN WILLIAMSBURG ECHOES EASTERN WAR

Battle News Intruded in Wedding Cheer and Caused It.

TWO POLICEMEN AMONG HURT

Struggle in a Dark Hallway Follows an Attempt to Make Arrests—Five Wounded.

War news and bad whisky were responsible for a combination shooting-stabbing-clubbing affray which wound up a bridal reception in Williamsburg early yesterday morning. Five men were arrested on charges of felonious assault. Two of the prisoners, one mortally wounded, two policemen and another victim of the affray were sent to hospitals.

Stefano Andeudaisky and Katinka Czeno were married on Sunday. On Sunday evening they gave a wedding reception at Palm Hall, 93-95 Grand Street, Williamsburg. The wedding reception was still progressing with unabated conviviality at 2 o'clock yesterday morning. Both Katinka and Stefano are Poles.

Stefano is a laborer, but he had a little money in bank, and he spent the whole balance left after he had purchased furniture to give his friends a good time. There had been such an abundance of good cheer that the company knew nothing of the historic events in the Far East until 1 o'clock yesterday morning, when Stanislaus Millim, a Russian, after a brief absence rushed into the hall and told the company that Rojestvensky had been defeated and that it was a shame.

"Good for the Japsky," shouted John Andeualsky, brother of the groom, and best man at the wedding. The fight began at once.

Half an hour later Andeualsky staggered into the Bedford Avenue Police Station bleeding from three wounds.

Sergeant Brennan sent Detective William McDonald and Policeman Felix Rasch to the hall. The entire company had fled. Guided by Andeualsky the two policemen then went to 148 Grand Street, where there is a saloon and a boarding house where a majority of the Polish and Russian guests live.

Three members of the party were found in the doorway at this address. One of them proved to be Millim, whom the Pole pointed out as the man who had stabbed him. Detective McDonald made for the Russian, who backed into the hallway. The policemen followed him and found themselves confronted by about a dozen Poles and Russians, all frenzied with bad whisky and ready to fight. The hallway was pitch dark.

McDonald was hit on his head with a shovel. He pulled his revolver and fired into the mob. There came in response a howl of pain from Stanislaus Volingutsky. Policeman Rasch had dropped to the floor with several stab wounds.

By this time word had reached the police station of what was going on. Capt. Gallagher turned out with the reserves and arrived just in time to save his men from being killed. McDonald and Rasch were both unconscious on the floor of the dark hallway. Volingutsky lay on the floor also.

Andeudaisky, Volingutsky and Detective McDonald were sent to the Eastern District Hospital. McDonald had been struck on his head seven times, but probably will recover. Volingutsky probably will die. Policeman Rasch was sent to the Williamsburg Hospital. Millim and Joseph Kupolski, another of the wedding guests, went in the same ambulance.

Millim was held in $2,000 bail on two charges of felonious assault.

ONE WOMAN IN TWO DIVORCES

Mrs. Fletcher Loses Her Husband and Mrs. Paine His Wife.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., May 30.—An interlocutory decree signed by Supreme Court Justice Keogh in favor of Mrs. Jennie Fletcher, divorcing her from her husband, James H. Fletcher, a contractor of Croton-on-the-Hudson, and awarding to her the custody of her two children, was filed in the Westchester County Clerk's office to-day. A similar decree of divorce was also granted to William H. Paine of Peekskill from his wife, Eda Paine, who was named as co-respondent by Mrs. Fletcher. Both suits were tried simultaneously before Justice Keogh. Paine in his suit named Fletcher as co-respondent.

Mrs. Fletcher recently obtained a verdict from a Sheriff's jury for $10,000 against Mrs. Paine for the alienation of her husband's affection, and an execution has been placed in the hands of the Sheriff.

Mrs. Paine made no defense to the two actions against her. In support of Mrs. Fletcher's motion for alimony, her lawyer, N. P. Bushnell, filed in court two love letters which were written, she alleges, by Mrs. Paine to Mr. Fletcher, and which she intercepted.

ROBBED AT PARK WALL.

Musician Dragged Into Shrubbery and Beaten.Loses $300 and Watch.

John J. Hughes, a musician of 328 West Eighty-third Street, was assaulted and robbed, he says, of $300 and a gold watch just after he left an Eighth Avenue car at Central Park West and Eighty-third Street at 1 o'clock yesterday morning.

He had hardly left the car when two men, he says, leaped over the Park wall and dragged him back to the shrubbery on the east side of the wall. Then, he told the police, one man clubbed him nearly unconscious with the butt of a revolver. After they had robbed him, the two ran. Hughes then shouted for help. Two policemen soon arrived, and they summoned an ambulance. Surgeon, who attended Hughes. The musician went home, but was said to be very ill yesterday.

The police were unible to find the robbers. There have been many such robberies recently in the neighborhood, particularly near Manhattan Square.

TWO CAN WED ON $2,100.

Thrifty Pair from Hungary Sets a Precedent to Others.

Annie Present of 451 East Houston Street and Solomon Frank of 100 Lewis Street were sweethearts years ago in Hungary. Four years ago they came to America with their parents. All the time they saved up to be married.

About a week ago, comparing bank accounts, they found they had $2,100 between them. They compared ages. He found himself twenty-four years old; she is twenty-one. They decided that youth and poverty, the two obstacles to their marriage, had been sufficiently overcome. So yesterday afternoon Joseph Levy, "The Duke of Essex Street," made them man and wife in the presence of their relatives and friends assembled. A diamond ring was a surprise present from the bridegroom to the bride.

Gift in Phillips Brooks's Memory.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Graduates and undergraduates of Harvard University to-day united in presenting to the Virginia Theological Seminary, near Alexandria, Va., a handsomely inscribed tablet in memory of Bishop Phillips Brooks of Massachusetts, who was once a student at the seminary. The address of presentation was delivered by Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins, pastor of Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, and the tablet was accepted on behalf of the seminary by Dr. Carl Grammar.

THE LETTER CARRIERS HAD THEIR PARADE

Willcox Reviewing, and It Made Him Feel Proud.

IN HONOR OF "SUNSET" COX

2,000 in Line and Great Crowds Out to See the Boys in Gray—Speeches at Cox Statue.

For the first time in many years the letter carriers paraded yesterday. Some 2,000 men turned out to honor the memory of Samuel Sullivan Cox—"Sunset" Cox—who in his lifetime did so much to better the conditions of letter carriers throughout the country.

The parade started from Fifty-eighth Street and Fifth Avenue just after 2:30 o'clock, and marched down Fifth Avenue to Seventeenth Street, where, turning into Union Square, the procession filed past a reviewing stand, in which were Police Commissioner McAdoo, Postmaster Willcox, Assistant Postmaster Morgan, and the heads of the postal departments.

The carriers made a fine showing. The men of each station marched in separate bodies, the end man of each double line carrying a flag with the station letter stamped on it. After every two or three stations there came brass bands composed of the musical members of various branches of the Letter Carriers' Association. Only the Manhattan carriers were represented, but the men of Empire Branch No. 36 made a parade that Postmaster Willcox afterward said made him feel proud of his post as the head of the Post Office in this city.

The parade was watched by great crowds all along the line of march. At the reviewing stand, a sight-seeing automobile filled with wives of the carriers dashed through the police lines and waved handkerchiefs to their boys in gray.

A company from Station E bore a flag with the odd device, "From the Tenderloin." At the head of it marched a handsome woman dressed in a white waist, a blue skirt, and wearing a letter carrier's slouch hat. Her appearance made Postmaster Willcox look puzzled. She was Mrs. T. F. Norton, the wife of a letter carrier.

The procession was brought up in the rear by six mail wagons. When these had gone past the reviewing stand and the drivers had saluted with their whips Commissioner McAdoo, Postmaster Willcox, and other guests of the occasion were introduced to a "rubber-neck" automobile which bore them to the Cox statue at Eighth Street and Lafayette Place, where speeches were delivered by the Commissioner, Postmaster Willcox, M. A. Fitzgerald, President of the local association, and John M. Parsons, ex-President of the National Letter Carriers' Association.

Commissioner McAdoo in receiving into his care the statue of S. S. Cox, which the building of the Subway had displaced, spoke of the many qualities of that excellent man and of his labors for the benefit of the letter carriers and the city generally.

After all this the letter carriers dined together luxuriously.

Two Murder Convictions Sustained.

ALBANY, May 30.—The Court of Appeals to-day affirmed the judgment of the lower courts convicting of murder in the first degree Charles Jackson, colored, and James Breen, both of New York City. Jackson was charged with assaulting and robbing Charles W. Roxbury, who subsequently died of his injuries, on July 10, 1903. Breen was convicted for killing William H. Keyes on Sept. 16, 1903, in Keyes's saloon.

GIRL WHO GRIEVED IS DEAD.

Took Acid While Family Was at Mother's Grave.

Helen O'Connor, a girl of nineteen years, remained at the home of her brother-in-law, Michael Bennett, 235 West One Hundred and Forty-fourth Street, yesterday while the rest of the family went to Calvary Cemetery to put flowers on Mrs. O'Connor's grave. While alone the daughter took acid and died soon afterward in the J. Hood Wright Hospital.

About a year ago the mother died, and Helen O'Connor became ill, grieving over her death. When the rest of the family were preparing yesterday to go to the cemetery the daughter, who had been crying in her room, begged to be allowed to remain at home.

When the members of the family returned at 4 o'clock they found her dying. Her brother-in-law said that she had taken an overdose of carbolic acid by mistake, as she used the drug for a toothache.

AUTO THROWN DOWN BANK.

Chauffeur of the Brandts of Trenton Breaks Both Kneecaps.

D. H. Brandt of Trenton, N. J., and Mrs. Brandt went visiting by automobile in Manhattan yesterday. They were being driven across Staten Island to New Jersey, when at Oakwood, while they were traveling fast, an automobile approached from the other direction.

There was not room in the roadway for the two machines to pass, so Purcell turned to the right and up an embankment, wrecking his machine to avoid a collision. The other machine passed on.

Mr. and Mrs. Brandt were thrown out, but not seriously hurt. Their chauffeur, Vincent J. Purcell had both kneecaps fractured. Dr. Devlin of New Dorp attended him, and he was taken by Mr. Brandt in a coach to Perth Amboy and thence by train to Trenton.

Ride Through Egg Harbor City Costs $50.

Special to The New York Times.

EGG HARBOR CITY, May 30.—A party of New Yorkers on their way to Atlantic City in an automobile, were arrested here to-day by Chief of Police Senfet for exceeding the legal speed limit. The occupants of the car refused to give their names, but when the Magistrate threatened to send them to jail the chauffeur gave his name as Albert Palvoseer of New York, and was fined $50.

LEMAIRE PARIS

The judges of the St. Louis Exposition acknowledged the superiority of our goods by placing them beyond competition.

It is quality that has made the name Lemaire famous. See that this name, spelled L-E-M-A-I-R-E (as above), is on the end and around the eye piece of every Opera and Field Glass you buy; otherwise you will buy worthless imitations.

The Ultimate Passion

A young man of high ideals playing into the hands of a powerful corrupt political ring in order to gain power through their influence and ultimately to defeat them—this is a hint of the plot of this strong, virile novel. It is a work of unusual power, an absorbing story, showing the machinations of political schemers and others prominent in social and business life in New York. The startling incidents that the political situation brings forth are closely woven in with a charming love-tale.

3 DAYS MORE of the FINAL Sale of The CENTURY Dictionary & Cyclopedia & Atlas

No more sets can be obtained after June 3

"The Century," with its 10 massive volumes, containing nearly 10,000 pages, 500,000 encyclopedic definitions and articles, 300,000 quotations, 20,000 indexed geographical entries, 150,000 encyclopedic articles, 8,000 superb engravings and 310 maps in five to ten colors, is a complete library in itself. Its fortunate owner possesses a magnificent library of reference—twenty-six standard books in one, as follows:

1. A Complete Defining Dictionary. "The work is as complete as skill and ability can make it." WILLIAM R. HARPER, LL. D., President University of Chicago. "The most remarkable work of its kind."—ELMER H. CAPEN, President Tufts College.

2. A Thesaurus of Philology and Etymology. "The greatest of its kind." — FRANCIS A. MARSH, Professor Philology, Lafayette College. "Our proofreaders find its etymologies so searching and scholarly that it is fast coming to supplant every other work hitherto in vogue with them."—University Press, Cambridge.

3. A Standard of Spelling and Pronunciation.

4. A Complete Treasury of Synonyms. "As a book of synonyms the dictionary must prove very useful to students and writers."—Democrat and Chronicle, Rochester, N. Y.

5. A Cyclopedia of Historical Information. "The most useful single work of reference issued in English, or any other language with which I am acquainted."—JOHN FISKE, LL. D., Author of "The American Revolution," "The Discovery of America," etc. "A work of exceptional value and utility."—HON. JAMES BRYCE, M. P., Author of "The American Commonwealth."

6. A Thesaurus of Technical and Mechanical Terms, Measures, Coins, Tools, Machines, etc. "A valuable work of ready reference to commercial men and manufacturers. They find it of great use in determining many points not mentioned in other cyclopedias of recent date."—R. K. WOOD, Maryland Steel Co.

7. A Cyclopedia of Commerce, Finance, Banking, Insurance, etc. "Convenient and full of accurate information."—HON. LYMAN J. GAGE, ex-Secretary of the Treasury.

8. A Museum of the Mechanical Arts and Trades. "With us it has superseded the necessity of reference to other dictionaries."—BALDWIN, DAVIDSON & WRIGHT, Patent Attorneys.

9. A Cyclopedia of Legal Terms. "Nothing in our language will so fully satisfy the demands for information, accurate, full and complete."—HON. DAVID J. BREWER, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. "Embodies the very latest and best definitions as laid down both by our best text writers and by the decrees of the courts as well."—WILLARD TELLER, General Attorney for the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

10. A Storehouse of Scientific Terms, giving the result of the very latest research and thought in every department of science, as botany, zoology, biology, mineralogy, physics, etc. "Indispensable both to the working and teaching scientist."—A. S. PACKARD, Professor of Zoology and Geology at Brown University. "Has defined, illustrated, pronounced and given the etymology of all technical terms in use in every science."—WILLIAM T. HARRIS, LL.D., United States Commissioner of Education.

11. A Thesaurus of Theological Terms. "I can hardly speak too strongly in praise of THE CENTURY."—REV. MORGAN DIX, Rector Trinity Church, New York City. "Regarded as the best authority and the most valuable reference book in my library."—REV. WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

12. A Cyclopedia of Medicine, Surgery, Physics, Anatomy, etc. "It is of much more use to physicians than any of the ordinary medical dictionaries."—ALLAN MCLANE HAMILTON, M. D., Attending Physician, New York Hospital for Nervous Diseases. "I know of no work that can be compared with it."—HENRY M. LYMAN, A. M., M. D., Senior Dean and Professor of Medicine, Rush Medical College.

13. A Glossary of Military and Naval Terms. "A wonderful treasury of reliable and important information."—NELSON A. MILES, ex-Commander-in-Chief U. S. Army. "Has been in use in the War Department Library for a number of years, and has proved of great value."—HON. ELIHU ROOT, ex-Secretary of War.

14. A Cyclopedia of Engineering. "Invaluable as a general reference work, and especially on all matters pertaining to civil engineering."—GEORGE F. SWAIN, Professor of Civil Engineering, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

15. A Complete Glossary of Electrical Terms. "I have never yet had occasion to look for a word that I did not find all the information I was in search of, and a great deal more."—WILLIAM A. ANTHONY, Consulting Electrician.

16. A Museum of Art and Archaeology, Mythology, Sculpture, Ceramics, Lacquer Work, Enamels, Embroidery, Heraldry, Armor and Dress, exquisitely illustrated.

17. A Lexicon of Architecture. "Contains a full glossary of architectural terms, and includes every department of mechanical science bearing on architecture and building, which makes it an invaluable handbook for the architect."—S. S. BEEMAN, Architect, Chicago, Ill.

18. An Astronomical Library with definitions and illustrations of constellations. "A perfect treasure house of condensed and accurate information."—C. A. YOUNG, Professor of Astronomy at Princeton College.

19. A Cyclopedia of Music. "I have been able to find in it what I scarcely anticipated, a full and concise explanation of musical terms. I note also biographies of musical celebrities, including composers, virtuosi, singers, conductors, and musicians, and the pronunciation of each name."—FLORENCE ZIEGFELD, President Chicago Musical College.

20. A Treasury of Quotations, familiar and unfamiliar. "I enjoy particularly the citations that illustrate the use of words."—DANIEL COIT GILMAN, ex-President Johns Hopkins University.

21. A Glossary of Abbreviations (arranged in regular alphabetical order).

23. A Pictorial Cyclopedia of Common Things, with eighth thousand illustrations of birds, animals, plants, buildings, tools, machines, instruments, statues, etc., exquisitely engraved. "Its illustrations surpass anything ever attempted in a similar publication."—The Nation.

23. A Biographical Library. "A complete biographical dictionary."—Literary World, London.

24. A Catalogue of Literature. "An exceedingly valuable reference catalogue of names of plays and novels, names in novels, plays, fables, poems, and works of imagination generally, names of battles and treaties, and, in fact, names referring to every conceivable entity or event."—Literary World, London.

25. A Universal Atlas. "I know of no atlas which equals it in the fulness and accuracy of its maps."—R. E. PEARY, Commander United States Navy.

26. An International Gazetteer. "Its perfectly systematized index and reference makes much saving in time when consulting maps."—COMMANDER HENRY H. BARROLL, United States Navy. "A complete gazetteer for all times and all nations."—Literary World, London.

JOHN HAY IN PARIS.

We observe that the Washington correspondents do not seem to attach much importance to the disclaimer of Secretary HAY that he is in Paris on any National or international business, preferring to treat it as a diplomatic "dementi," rather than as a real denial.

They ascribe much too much foresight to the Secretary of State, more than any human being could really possess. In his capacity of convalescent tourist nothing would be more natural than that Mr. HAY should desire to make some brief sojourn in the most attractive city in the world without having his motives impugned, or any international "game" attributed to him. On the other hand, how could he possibly foresee that his arrival in Paris would synchronize with the abolition of Russia's sea power which renders her incapable of continuing the war with Japan with any prospect of success?

There is no reason whatever to suspect the sincerity or the candor of the Secretary's statement. On the other hand, there is no reason whatever to suppose that if any properly accredited representative of any great nation can show Mr. HAY any opportunity, during his sojourn in Paris, for rendering a service to civilization by helping to arrest the war in the Far East in its progress to a foregone conclusion, Mr. HAY would not hear gladly what such a person might have to say.

THE PITY OF IT.

As the reports from the great naval battle in the Far East multiply and grow more definite the feature that strikes the reader most is the one-sidedness of the fight. Here is a great and distinctly a military empire, of which the international standing and the place in civilization depend upon its prowess in war. We are speaking dered untenable, sunk or driven ashore, while all the loss they could inflict upon their victors was one man killed! And so in Korea Strait, the contest was so unequal that twenty Russian ships were destroyed without being able to inflict the reprisal of destroying a single Japanese vessel.

What is the explanation? We are tempted to recur to Lord SALISBURY's words, spoken at the outset of the war of 1898, which gave so much umbrage to poor Spain, and to say that the explanation is the contrast between living and dying nations. And yet, at least in the later case, not between nations but between Governments. It is not the brave, patient Russian people which has been undergoing these defeats. It is not the Russian people, which in spite of its Government has carried off so many trophies in the arts of peace, which is here implicated. It is the Russian autocracy, in spite of which these trophies have been won, and which in its own special boast and business of the conduct of war has been shown to be so abysmally incompetent. What a depth of judicial blindness will be required for that autocracy to continue to refuse the recognition of accomplished facts until every peasant in Russia has had forced upon him the knowledge why his country has been so uniformly beaten by Japan.

JUDGE HOOKER.

Justice WARREN B. HOOKER of the Supreme Court would put the bench, the bar, Gov. HIGGINS, ex-Gov. ODELL, the Members of the Legislature, and the people of the State under considerable obligations if he would be good enough to resign his office. The calling of the Legislature in extraordinary session to remove him from the bench would be a costly proceeding. That is one good reason why his resignation is desired. Then the ejection of a Judge forcibly, as it were, with every circumstance of scandal and publicity, is so unseemly compared to the little formality of dropping a note to the Governor that those who respect the bench and are jealous of its good name would learn with great pleasure that Judge HOOKER had been persuaded to choose the quieter course. There is another and a graver reason.

No Judge has ever been removed in this State by the process chosen in the case of Judge HOOKER. Many serious-minded men have hoped the occasion never would arise for getting a Judge off the bench by that method. The charges against Judge HOOKER, it will be remembered, were heard and inquired into by a committee of the Assembly. The committee reported unanimously that he ought to be removed, and there the matter rests. Nothing further was done at the regular session, but Gov. HIGGINS has declared that he will call an extra session to dispose of the Hooker case. These proceedings have been taken under Section 11, Article VI., of the Constitution, which declares: "Judges of the Court of Appeals and Justices of the Supreme Court may be removed by concurrent resolution of both houses of the Legislature, if two-thirds of all the members elected to each house concur therein."

The removal of a Judge under this section of the Constitution, it will be observed, is purely a legislative act.

mining, and of lumbering, upon which main industries depends the welfare of the State of Idaho, will be solved, it is believed, when the energies of trained men shall be directed to conserve its forest areas.

The welcoming of this measure by the enlightened business interests in Idaho is significant of the work and methods of Chief GIFFORD PINCHOT of the National Bureau of Forestry. Senator DUBOIS of Idaho, the strong champion of the new reserve against the ignorant and defeated opposition headed by Senator HEYBURN, was himself the bitterest opponent of the lax methods formerly obtaining in the creation, maintenance, and control of National reserves. In his letter of advocacy to the President, Senator DUBOIS notes that during the first years of National experimentation reserves were created without proper investigation, and there were "not sufficient safeguards to protect stock raisers, miners, lumbermen, agriculturists, and people of our section generally."

Ample protection is now given to all classes, with the intent of fostering and making permanent the various industries concerned. The prime dependence of the State upon its timber and water supply is recognized. Almost two-thirds of its agriculture requires irrigation farming. Near the newly reserved forests, whose roots on the mountains are a vast sponge that feeds with almost metered regularity the sources of Camas Creek and Henry's Fork of Snake River, lie 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 acres of reclaimable land. Here the most extensive irrigation project, in the judgment of Senator DUBOIS, that will be undertaken anywhere in the United States, contemplating the storage of the headwaters of the Snake River, demands the protection of the forests as a prime factor in the design to reclaim this area and to insure a permanent water supply to the lands in the Snake River Valley which are already cultivated.

Fire in the forests and overgrazing on the unwooded slopes are of constant danger to the ranges and water flow; the large mining interests, especially, welcome a system that will yield to them without discrimination a sustained supply of timber and water, and protection against forest fires. The forests are not to be devastated under authority of the Government, but all the timber that can properly be spared will be sold to the highest bidder. Private enterprises upon the reserve, like reservoirs, ditches, roads, telephone lines, stores, and Summer resorts, will be allowed under a regulative system intended to develop most highly its possibilities. Altogether, the problems attendant upon a scheme of this scope and nature will be sufficient to absorb the attention of the most capable graduates in forestry.

WALL STREET PRAYER MEETINGS.

We desire to speak with the greatest respect of the effort to evangelize the market place which has found expression in the Wall Street prayer meetings. Next Monday, we are told, the attacks upon this stronghold of worldliness are to be begun in force, those hitherto undertaken being scarcely more than reconnoissances. One hundred more or less eminent clergymen veil to come and continue coming through the like agency.

But it is not easy to see what new fields are left for it to conquer or what new wonders it still has in store for us. WHITMAN's man-of-war's bird, "at dusk that look'st on Senegal, at morn America," is a slow coach beside "the light-onspeeding telegraph" that "bears nothing on its beam" and doesn't even call for a wire to travel on. In tropic seas the ship's yard and mast and rigging are sometimes hung with electric fireballs of a radiance to dim all the constellations. From a spectacular point of view such a display would exceed anything which took place on the Campania the other day when the two continents poured in their invisible messages upon her. But in real interest the latter was much the greater, and perhaps it has nowhere a parallel. It showed what can be done and what will be done hereafter as a common incident of marine travel the world over.

THE SUMMER BREAKFAST.

In New York a man may lunch satisfactorily in any one of numberless places, according to his standard and his means. He may also dine to his liking through an embarrassing latitude of choice. But when he goes out to hunt for a breakfast his troubles begin. No doubt this is well enough for birds, which are almost the only wild things without nocturnal habits, if we except nighthawks, owls, bats, and a few ornithological freaks; but civilized man is peculiarly a nocturnal creature, and the machinery of city life is largely adjusted to this fact. When he rises he wants to find his breakfast awaiting him as he emerges from his morning toilet. He wants it dainty and appetizing. Of course he knows that the cruder operations of housekeeping, such as sweeping, dusting, scrubbing, and the like, are disagreeable necessities, but he is not unreasonable in asking that they be postponed until he has established a more stable equilibrium between his nervous and his muscular systems than that with which he usually rises. Unless this desire is respected his home life is likely to be a failure.

For one who has to seek a breakfast under conditions which he cannot control the task is wholly without attractions. It may be there are places where a neat and dainty breakfast is served without the accompaniment of floor cleaning, mirror polishing, and like menial functions, but if so they are infrequent and well-concealed. The average restaurant subordinates everything to whichever meal represents for it the "peak of the load." For some it is luncheon, for more it is dinner. For few, if any, is it breakfast. The usual experience of the breakfast seeker is that the service he gets is perfunctory. His waiter is a probationer not deemed equal to the requirements of a more responsible assignment, and when not taking orders is "cleaning up." The kitchen is relaxed. An assistant to the chef, as low in the numerical scale as the size of the establishment permits, presides at the range, short-handed. The waits are tedious, the cooking dubious to distinctly bad, the coffee doubtful to intolerable, and the fruit warm and wilted. Meanwhile, whatever needs to be done to make the place about the social level of the barkeeper, tip-taking becomes impossible, and if Mr. SMITH thinks the gratitude he can buy with small change in the lower deeps is worth having his judgment needs revising.

More About the Use of "H."

It is suggested to us, in reference to the lower-class Britisher's habit of "dropping his 'h's,'" that it is his inheritance from Norman French, just as is the customary or frequent disuse by educated Englishmen and Americans when speaking, though not when writing, of the "h" in words like "honest," "homage," "humble," and "humor." It is asked if the dropping of "h's" may not have been general at some time in England, and attention is called to the, to us, unaccountable British use of "an" instead of "a" before words beginning with an aspirated "h." As this is done not only when the next syllable is accented, but also when it is not—in "an historical" and in "an history"—the theory of determination by emphasis fails. In answer to the question why the cockneys put in superfluous "h's" as well as drop those that are orthodox, the suggestion is made that the uneducated, in imitating the more or less limited usage of the lettered—always illogical, to them—became confused in their efforts to pronounce politely, with the result that when they finally settled the matter to their satisfaction and the dialect became fixed on this point, the "h's" were used and dropped without discrimination, just as the American darky, becoming confused in somewhat the same manner when in company, says "chicking" instead of "chicken," and "Mr. Johnsing" instead of "Mr. Johnson." All these problems have been answered more or less satisfactorily by modern philologists in books easily accessible, and this is hardly the place to paraphrase what Prof. LOUNSBURY, perhaps the sanest and wisest as well as the best informed of the lot, has said about them. A question that yet awaits any sort of a settlement, so far as we know, is why the cockney dialect of DICKENS is wholly unlike that of today as presented in books and newspapers.

As to "Cures" by "Osteopathy."

Assorted admirers of quacks have been most unduly delighted by the appearance in THE TIMES Monday morning of a tale about the restoration of an imbecile to mental soundness by an "osteopath," and they are sending in to us exultant letters and postal cards—chiefly postal cards—asking what we have to say about that remarkable achievement by a practitioner of the class which we have hitherto treated with alternating derision and denunciation. If these correspondents had read the tale in question with a little more care—and intelligence—they would have seen that the news we presented was, not the cure of an imbecile by an "osteopath," but the fact that a well-known and notable New Yorker thought such a cure had been so effected—a very different thing and a really interesting phenomenon. Certainly THE TIMES has not abandoned its long-established policy of hitting a quack's head whenever it shows in sight, and it has no intention of doing so. Enlightened readers, we are sure, noted instantly the ludicrous weakness of the claim made in behalf of the bone man. The case was one that required the most skilled judgment to decide either the past or the present condition of the boy. And if was decided by whom? Why, by a coachman living in a tenement house and by a clergyman who, however estimable and learned, has hardly a right to speak as an alienist! Presumably the boy has been in a bad state and is now in a better, and possibly the change was coincident with the manipulations to which he was subjected. That comes very far indeed from proving that the manipulations worked the change, and if by some marvelous chance they did it is safe enough to say that the cure was a pure accident, much like those said on much but rather poor authority to have been effected in similar cases by blows or falls that undid the work of previous blows or falls. Arrest of mental development may be caused in many ways, and for it various treatments are tried by real doctors, some-

OVERWORKED RAILROAD MEN.

Conditions That Help Cause Accidents on American Systems.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A remarkable statement appeared in THE TIMES some time since, and I have been greatly surprised that it seems to have excited no attention. This was that in one year, 1903, there had been no less than 10,000 deaths by railroad collisions in the United States, (with, of course, numberless injuries,) and none on English railways. A letter received from a friend just at the time this statement appeared may supply some clue to the reasons for this amazing difference.

My friend's husband is an English gentleman, who emigrated to the South some years since, and, being in reduced circumstances, got work on a railway, and at the time she wrote was acting as baggage master. She writes thus:

"Once installed, he found he was to be car reporter, Freight Inspector, warehouseman, and a few other trifles too numerous to mention. He has to be at the train by 7 every morning, (means getting up at 6,) takes sandwiches, and works without a break till 7 P. M., (twelve solid hours;) comes home, has supper, returns to the treadmill till any hour of the night—last night till 12:30—and Sundays the same as weekdays. A fiendish job.

"Sometimes two or three freight trains come in at night. Next day he has to check each article of sixty or seventy cars into the warehouse, also load up a train or two, besides checking all baggage for the passenger trains. So night comes and he has not had a moment to look at the books or make reports. So he has to sit up all hours to get it done. Enough work to keep three men busy, and not leave the inevitable accumulation of unfinished reports for Sundays."

The remuneration for the above work is $60 per month. Feeling that death or madness must result, he has now resigned this position. A man of remarkable energy and perseverance, but no one can work long without food or rest and his brain forever strained to its utmost capacity of endurance.

With a dazed and bewildered brain, a memory fitful and unreliable from exhaustion, eyes so weakened by the strain of constant attention, so that even the sense of color cannot be relied on, what wonder that blunders are ever being made and these incessant and tremendous accidents occur. SAXON.

TRADES UNION PERSECUTIONS.

Methods of Organized Labor Compared with Those of the Inquisition.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The arrogance and intolerance of organized labor has once more been exemplified in the Chicago strike. The same old brutalities, the same disregard for the elementary rights of others that characterize nearly every strike in greater or lesser degree have been the weapons used by these trades unionists in order to stifle individual liberty and to coerce those who may not be in agreement with them in their propaganda of "Go with the gang or get off the earth." The compulsory methods adopted by organized labor are so well known as to need no recapitulation.

So fertile in malice, and so comprehensive has the scheme of barbarity gone that murders and maimings are incidentals to strikes.

Demagogues blatantly mouth about the "majority," but are silent on the fact that non-union workers are in the vast majority in every country in the world.

In the meantime the general public appears to be more concerned in the fate of a dissolute woman charged with murdering her paramour than with the fact that men are beaten to death in the great centres of civilization (?) because they have the temerity to be satisfied with wages and conditions that other men reject.

In former times men were burned at the stake and otherwise tortured for heresy. In these days there is the bludgeon, dynamite, or minor cruelties for the non-union heretic.

MUNICIPAL FAITH CURE.

Where the Line Should Be Drawn Between Public and Private Business.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your to-day's very interesting editorial entitled "Municipal Faith Curists" you speak of municipal ownership advocates as teaching that "any function that the municipality can perform better than the individual or the corporation ought to be turned over to the city."

Do not those who so teach begin at the wrong end of the lesson? Does not the question of municipal or public ownership depend upon the inherent difference between what is public and what is private? Whatever can be done by individuals, natural persons, without permission or special aid of government or the public is clearly private, but those necessary undertakings which require such permission or aid are no less clearly public. The question is not whether the city can do the thing better than the individual, but whether the latter can do it at all. If he can, it is private business; if not, it must be public.

Question then arises as to whether the public, Government, shall mind its own business or farm it out to the private persons, not natural, but of its own creation, known as corporations.

JOHN SHERWIN CROSBY.

New York, May 24, 1905.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In to-day's issue of THE TIMES the faith that animates advocates of municipal ownership is said to be that "any function that the municipality can perform better than the individual ought to be turned over to the city." While in one sense this is true, it is not a clear definition, is misleading, and to many persons would seem to include the entire gospel of Socialism.

A fairer statement of our belief is that any function requiring a public franchise grant is public business, and as such should not be farmed out to private individuals or corporations whose first consideration is to make money, and second to give the people as little as possible in return for the privileges enjoyed.

The Municipal, State, or National Governments should not engage in private business; neither should public business be intrused to an individual or a corporation, however amicable or well intentioned they may be. If, as THE TIMES contends, municipal ownership would be such a source of "graft" and increased power for corrupt public officials, why, do not they declare in its favor instead of strenuously trying to perpetuate the present system? Is it not true that a well-organized body of latter-day legislators can make more money by the sale of one good, fat monopoly franchise than the emoluments of office for an entire year would net these same individuals?

And, lastly, Mr. Editor, don't call us names. THE TIMES has brains enough on its brilliant editorial staff to debate calmly the merits or demerits of our contentions. If our claims are fallacious they will meet the failure they deserve; but if, on the contrary, they are in accordance with sound public policy, THE TIMES should be the first to welcome our delivery from a municipal system of government which a distinguished public man styles "the failure of a self-governing people." THOMAS J. CLINES.

Plea for Sunday Baseball.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Again the mass of the people are reminded that they will be deprived of a favorite amusement on Sunday—viz., baseball. This continual oppression hits the working people hardest, as Sunday is their only time of freedom. What are we coming to if we are to be thus treated? The writer thinks that if the press of New York will side with the people's wishes it will get such rights for them that will insure personal liberty when no harm is being done.

If our young men are not allowed to play ball on Sunday, what will they do to pass time? The question is easily answered—they will go just where the police will hunt them down and take them to the stations in patrol wagons. The wrong that is being done here with the people's liberties being trampled under the heels of oppressors can only be righted by the press. Will anything be done? That is the question. A LOVER OF LIBERTY.

AVENGING ON LEONGS DESCEND ON HIP SINGS

Factional Spies Pilot Police in Big Chinatown Raid.

DOVE OF PEACE IS SLAIN

As the Hip Sings Dreamed Unguarded Doors Were Smashed and They Were Hauled Away.

Chinatown's dove of peace, which has been fattening on war rumors ever since the Hip Sing Tongs "sicked" the police on the gamblers in the On Leong Tong, four weeks ago, was slain yesterday on the altar of the josshouse in Mott Street, when the On Leongs squared accounts by "sicking" seventy-five policemen on the gambling dens of the Hips. Then followed the biggest and most spectacular daylight raid Chinatown ever witnessed. The police came out of the scrimmage with twenty-eight prisoners and several wagonloads of Chinese gambling paraphernalia.

Capt. Eggers took twenty-five plain clothes men to Chinatown at 3 o'clock for the raid. They were told off in pairs, and put in charge of fifty uniformed policemen whom Capt. Eggers summoned. Squads of policemen entered Chinatown from different directions, each squad having its own particular instructions to carry out. While some of the uniformed men were lined up at the corner of the Bowery and Pell Street, others formed a line across the head of Pell Street. Still another line did guard duty at the Chatham Square end of Doyers Street.

When Chinatown sighted the tightening coils of the police cordon there were lamentations in many keys and many tongues. From the high windows of the rickety old buildings in crooked little Doyers Street Chinamen poked their heads out, while others jammed the fire escapes in a mad effort to get away. Some of the Chinamen got out of the houses and slid down wash line poles, while others jumped a story or two into the rear yards and fled to the dark cellars, where they piled over one another like frightened rats.

Detectives and policemen battered down a door at 20½ Pell Street and found a crowd of twenty-five Chinamen huddled in a corner. The room was pitch dark, and Detective Jordan lighted the gas. He found a Chinaman in the act of reaching for a pile of fan tan chips in the centre of a table. The detective pushed the Chinaman aside and found $29 in silver, which was the extent of the last fan tan pot.

Detective Hamilton, who led a squad of policemen into 23 Pell Street, found five Chinamen playing the game known as pi gow. Lee Loy, a Chinaman employed by the police to get evidence, cautioned the detective to look out for a pepper thrower, who, Loy explained, had a handful of red pepper ready to throw in the detective's eyes. Just then the man with the pepper hurled it at the detective. Hamilton protected his eyes and the pepper thrower jumped from a window and went down into a cellar. Hamilton gave chase and captured him. In the Chinaman's pockets Hamilton found four packages of red pepper.

While Hamilton was searching the man three other Chinamen appeared, and a hot fight followed in the cellar. More police arrived and clubbed the Chinamen into submission.

Detectives Kennedy and Bath led a raiding party into 28 Pell Street, where a Chinaman drew a big revolver on them. Bath knocked the revolver from the Chinaman's hands, while Kennedy threw the man down and dragged him into the street.

At 20 Mott Street the police found a dozen Chinamen playing "bock-a-boo." Here five Chinamen, dreaming over sizzling pipes of "hop," were found. Ten others were in such a pleasant state of coma that they had not heard the noise of battering down the doors with axes and crowbars. The police left the dreamers there, after taking away all of the gambling paraphernalia and opium pipes.

At 13 Pell Street Detective Lloyd had to jump from a rear window to escape from a wild-eyed Chinaman, who chased him with a shotgun. The Chinese guide explained that the game played in this house was known as "gee far."

While all this excitement was in progress the crowds of sightseers over on the Bowery and Chatham Square found much amusement in waching Chinamen running over roof tops and climbing in and out of windows in a frantic effort to escape.

All of the prisoners were taken to the Elizabeth Street Station and bundled into cells, three and four in a cell. Several hundred people who followed the patrol wagons to the police station enjoyed the work of the Sergeant at the desk who collected the names of the prisoners.

In the hubbub Chin Dip's Chinese dog, Chop Suey, met an awful fate. Chop was trying to follow his master into a patrol wagon when he was knocked down, run over, and killed.

At the raids it seemed as if every Chinaman of importance was there, barring Chinatown's mayor, Tom Lee. Tom was noticeably absent. He was found seated in the library of his home on Riverside Drive. When asked if he had anything to do with the solar plexis blow dealt to the Hip Sing Tongs, Tom, who belongs to the On Leong Tong faction, knocked the ashes from his long black cigar, gazed out of the window at the Hudson and said:

"Fline day for Declaration Day; fline day to plant flowers on glaves."

Sixteen Chinamen who acted as spies for the police yesterday will appear as witnesses to-day if they are alive. The Hip Sings are on the warpath, and to-day the dead dove of peace will probably be served up as Mock Duck in Chinatown's leading restaurant.

CLASH BETWEEN LUMBERMEN.

Canadians and Americans in Open Warfare Along St. John's River.

Special to The New York Times.

BANGOR, Me., May 30.—Open warfare has broken out between the Canadian and American lumbermen along the St. John River on the northern boundary of Maine. Strained relations arising from efforts by the Canadians to prohibit the Americans from using sheer booms in the river on the ground of obstruction to navigation and xiolation of the Ashburton treaty culminated Sunday, when L. W. Pond, a Canadian log driving contractor, acting, he said, under instructions, blew out a section of the Van Buren Lumber Company's boom on the Canadian side, near Van Buren, went through with several batteaus, and proceeded up the river toward the mouth of the Grand River, where another sheer boom is hung.

In the meantime the Van Buren people were notified, the mills were shut down, and a small army armed with weapons of all kinds, including a number of repeating rifles, were mobilized at the Grand River boom. When the Canadians came up the river they appeared overawed at the show of force and dropped back for a short distance and later retreated, with threats that they would clear the river of all booms.

The American lumbermen are placing armed guards at all their booms, to be on duty day and night, and serious results are feared if the Canadians make any further attacks.

FOUR SAVED AT HELL GATE.

Boys and Brave Drivers Rescued by Quick-Witted Policeman.

George Conboy, eight years old, and William Steinberg, seven, both of 321 East Eighty-eighth Street, were playing with some other boys on the American Ice Company's pier at the foot of East Ninety-first Street yesterday afternoon when Steinberg slipped and fell over into the water. Conboy tried to save him from falling, and was dragged over with his chum.

The swift Hell Gate current swept the boys out toward the middle of the river. They sank and rose and sank again while their playmates stood on the pier paralyzed with fear. Then the boys on land ran to the street shouting for help. Their cries were heard by Louis Heithaus and John Hayes, two young drivers for the ice company. The young men ran to the stringpiece, and without stopping even to take off their heavy boots sprang into the water.

The boys were then fifty yards off shore and sinking again. The strong current carried the men to the sinking boys, and the lads were caught just in time. Then the rescuers had to breast the current. With great difficulty they managed to get back to the pier, and with their last remaining strength hold on to the piles.

Policeman Butler and several other men had reached the pier. Realizing that prompt work was needed if the men and boys were to be saved, Butler ordered those around him to bring some heavy pieces of rope from the ice house.

At the ends of three of these ropes nooses were made. One was slipped about Butler. Then, with the other nooses in his hands, he was lowered over the edge of the pier. He slipped a noose over the head and shoulders of each of the men, and then the men on the pier hauled the men and boys up. The boys were unconscious, but soon recovered.

The two men, although much exhausted by their battle with the current, recovered sufficiently to return to their work.

The rescue was witnessed by a large crowd who cheered the drivers and the quick-witted policeman.

$500,000 FOR PUBLIC USE.

Mrs. E. C. Thayer Leaves Fortune for Charity and Education.

KEENE, N. H., May 30.—More than half a million dollars in public bequests is distributed by the will of Mrs. Edward C. Thayer, of this city, just admitted to probate. The principal bequests are as follows:

One hundred thousand dollars for the establishment of a Summer home for poor girls and mothers or for working girls; $50,000 for the E. C. Thayer fund at Brown University; $30,000 to the town of Bridge, Mass., for high school purposes; $20,000 for the City Hospital, Worcester, Mass.; Kurn Hattin Homes, Westminster, Vt., $10,000, and $15,000 additional at the death of one of the beneficiaries to the Kurn Hattin Homes, Westminster, Vt.; $10,000 to the New England Hospital for Women and Children, Boston; $10,000 to the American Unitarian Association; $10,000 to the Trustees of Nurses' Home, Worcester, Mass.; $10,000 to the Calhoun Colored School, Calhoun, Ala.; $10,000 to Berea College, Kentucky; $6,000 each to Trustees of Wellesley and Smith Colleges for the support of the Julia Ball Thayer Scholarships, and $5,000 each to the Five Points School of Industry, New York; Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala.; Cushing Academy, Ashburnham, Mass.; Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

One-half of the residue is equally divided between the towns of Bridge, Mass., and Winchester, N. H., for high school or educational purposes.

RARE OPERATION PERFORMED.

Surgeons Opened Spinal Column of Carpenter Whom Fall Paralyzed.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 30.—The operation of laminectomy was performed for the first time at the Maryland General Hospital to-day upon George H. Harrison, a carpenter, who lives near Norrisville, Md. Harrison on Monday last fell from the roof of a house upon which he was working, a distance of about thirty-five feet, and was thought to have dislocated his neck.

An incision was made to the spinal column, about six inches in length. The incision was made to the bone over the seat of the supposed dislocation, which, however, proved to be a fracture. It was found that three vertebrae had been broken by the fall, and about fourteen pieces of fractured bone were removed.

The spinal canal was opened and the cord was found to be almost cut in half. The patient was placed in a bed with the head elevated and ropes placed around the shoulders and so arranged as to exert a tension on the spinal column. The patient is paralyzed from his neck down.

DUEL WITH HATCHETS.

Two Lathers Fought and Each Has a Fractured Skull.

Thomas Halley and Michael Gallagher of 229 West Fifty-second Street, both lathers, and until recently friends, fought a duel yesterday with the tomahawk-shaped hatchets they use in their trade. The fight occurred at 243 West Sixty-first Street.

The police found Halley with his skull fractured. He was taken to Bellevue. Gallagher was arrested. Later when the police heard that the surgeons had restored Halley to consciousness, they took Gallagher to the hospital for identification. Halley, at the sight of his enemy, would have renewed the fight, if not restrained.

The surgeons, seeing that Gallagher was very weak, examined him and found that he, too, had a fracture of the skull. He was put to bed instead of going back to a cell. The condition of both men is critical.

MAJOR CARSON ACCEPTS.

Newspaper Man to be Chief of Department of Manufactures.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Major John M. Carson, Washington correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES and The Philadelphia Public Ledger, and President of the Gridiron Club, has accepted the post of Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures of the Department of Commerce and Labor, tendered him by the President some days ago.

His commission will be issued to-morrow.

COIFFURE SAVED HER LIFE.

Woman Thrown from Auto Turned Somersault and Struck on Head.

In a collision between an automobile in which she was riding and a trolley car Mrs. Caroline Laura Schumacher, thirty-seven years old, of 1,760 Sixtieth Street, Brooklyn, was thrown out, turned a somersault, and struck on her head and back on the stone pavement at Franklin Street and West Broadway early yesterday morning. A heavy coiffure probably saved her life.

Mrs. Schumacher, her husband, and her two children and the chauffeur were on their way to the West Shore ferry, where they intended to take a train for Sullivan County. The automobile was running down Franklin Street at about 7:35 A. M., and a north-bound Eighth Avenue car was making up time on West Broadway. The auto and car struck at right angles.

Those who saw Mrs. Schumacher's fall thought she was killed. Ambulance Surgeon Hill of the Hudson Street Hospital found, however, that she was suffering only from shock and a lacerated wound on the head. He dressed the wound, and Mrs. Schumacher proceeded on her outing.

HARVARD ASTRONOMERS DISCOVER A NEW STAR

Its Name Will Be Nova Ophiuchi No. 3—A Rare Phenomenon.

WOMAN'S PART IN DISCOVERY

"New Stars" Have Their Origin in Some Celestial Catastrophe—This One Long Thought a Variable.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 30.—The Harvard astronomers announce the apparent discovery of a new star, R. S. Ophiuchi. Miss Cannon, from an examination of the light curves, called attention to the remarkable increase in the light of this star which took place in 1898. The star has been photographed at this observatory every year since 1888, except 1889. The star appears to have had about the tenth magnitude before 1891, gradually increasing in brightness from the year 1893 to 1897.

In 1898 it was somewhat fainter, until May 31, and one month later, on June 30, it was more than three magnitudes brighter. Then it gradually grew fainter, until Oct. 8, when it was again at about the tenth magnitude. During 1899 it remained faint, but in 1900 became brighter, diminishing again to the tenth magnitude in September of that year.

Since then the variations have been slight. An examination of several good chart plates shows only one star in this position. Both spectrum and light curves indicate that this object should be regarded as a new star rather than a variable star, and its proper designation would be Nova Ophiuchi No. 3. The new stars of 1604 and 1848 appeared in this same constellation.

"New" or "temporary" stars are phenomena of very rare occurrence. According to a noted authority "but few undoubted examples of the class are recorded in the annals of astronomy." In some cases, it is thought, some supposedly "new" stars have been merely variable stars of irregular period and fitful variability. Others, though, are known to have had their origin in some real catastrophe, such as the collision of two dark bodies in space, or possibly the passage of a bright or dark body through a gaseous nebula.

The new star of 1604, referred to in the Boston dispatch, was observed by Kepler in that year. With his assistants this astronomer, history relates, was observing the planets Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn, which were near each other a few degrees from the constellation Ophiuchus, when one of Kepler's pupils, one Brunowski, noticed that a new and very brilliant star was added to the constellation. It was white, and exceeded in brightness Mars and Jupiter, but did not quite equal Venus. It then slowly diminished in brightness.

By March, 1605, it had disappeared from the vision of the naked eye. It is thought possible that the star may have been previously seen by Ptolemy. Chinese annals mention the same star. It has disappeared altogether now.

The new star of 1848 was observed by Hind at Bishop's private observatory in Regent's Park, London. He noticed a new star of about the fifth magnitude between Zeta and Eta, Ophiuchi. It was of a reddish-yellow color, and later increased in brightness to nearly the fourth magnitude. It, too, has now disappeared.

Most recent of "new" stars discovered was Nova Persei, found by Anderson in Edinburgh Feb. 21, 1901. In this country it was first observed four days later at the Lick Observatory, in California, and by that time it had already begun to get dimmer. At 11 o'clock in the morning of Feb. 25 it was fully half a magnitude brighter than the first-magnitude star Capella, but at 7 P. M. it was half a magnitude fainter than Capella. Its brightness continued to decrease, and it has now disappeared.

Its spectrum was peculiar, in that it contained no trace of either bright or dark lines in the blue or violet. Its light appeared to be strictly continuous, though a few extremely broad bands were noticed. This peculiarity of Nova Persei is a very unusual feature in a new star.

MISS LARNED MARRIED.

Sister of ex-Champion Tennis Player Bride of Lieut. McCarthy.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., May 30.—Miss Elizabeth Larned of Summit, a sister of William A. Larned, once National lawn tennis champion, and herself a skillful tennis and golf player, was married this afternoon to Lieut. Albert M. McCarthy of Washington, D. C. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Walker Gwynne of Calvary Episcopal Church.

Summit is Miss Larned's native place, and she has been living there with her father, but nearly all of her time for the past three years has been devoted to traveling.

MARRIAGE SECRET A YEAR.

Miss Blunt and Rumph Thought to be Engaged—Now They Tell.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., May 30.—Miss Blanche Blunt and George Rumph, both of Bloomfield, surprised their parents yesterday by announcing that they were married June 25 last at the parsonage of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, East Orange, by the rector, the Rev. William P. Taylor.

It had been generally thought that Miss Blunt and Mr. Rumph were engaged, and a wedding was expected in the Fall. They are now receiving congratulations.

STRAUS—WEIL.

Isidor Straus's Summer Home the Scene of His Daughter's Marriage.

Special to The New York Times.

ELBERON, N. J., May 30.—Miss Minnie Straus, daughter of Isidor Straus of New York, was married at noon to-day to Dr. Richard Weil, also of New York City. The ceremony was performed at Sunnyside, the Summer home of the Strauses, in Ocean Avenue. The Rev. Dr. Schulman of New York officiated. Nearly 200 relatives and invited guests were present.

The marriage ceremony took place in the great hall of the Straus villa, which resembled a rose garden. The bride was given away by her father. The maid of honor was Miss Vivian Straus, and Dr. Edward Beer was best man. A wedding breakfast followed the ceremony. The place where Dr. and Mrs. Weil will spend their honeymoon was kept secret from the guests.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Frances Ring, who played the part of Lucy Rigby this season in "The County Chairman," was engaged by Henry W. Savage yesterday for Jane Whitbeck in The Eastern "College Widow" company, which begins its season in Boston. The Western company will be headed by Dorothy Tennant, who played the role at the Garden this year.

Ernest Clark, bareback rider and aerialist, was back at the Hippodrome last night with his arm in bandages. The ligaments were strained at Monday night's performance, when he fell off his horse while doing a somersault.

ROCKEFELLER, JR., MOVES.

To Stay at Pocantico Hills All Summer, He Says.

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, May 30.—Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., to-day moved to Pocantico Hills from their New York home. They were met at the station by Mr. Rockefeller's father's automobile and a large, three-seated carriage. Mr. Rockefeller looked well, and when asked about his health said:

"I never felt better in my life."

"It was understood that you were going to the mountains," somebody said.

"I am going to stay right here for the rest of the Summer," he replied. "This is the best health resort I know of. I'm going to take a complete rest. Tarrytown air is good enough for me."

John D. Rockefeller, Sr., entertained a large party of guests to-day, and as usual played golf.

TRICK HORSE TAKES A PLUNGE

Leaves His Driver Ashore — Hauled Out with a Derrick.

Running across town at a furious clip, a horse plunged into the East River last night, and was rescued with the greatest difficulty after he had swum about for almost an hour. The horse belonged to John Kirkpatrick, a blacksmith, of 447 West Seventy-sixth Street.

While putting the animal through his paces before a crowd at Tenth Avenue and Twenty-second Street, Kirkpatrick, seated in a light runabout, decided to do a trick. He removed the bit from the horse's mouth and tried to drive him in circles. The horse bolted and ran eastward. Kirkpatrick was thrown out at Third Avenue, and the horse went on and plunged into the East River at Twenty-second Street.

Dr. Philip Kohnstamm of the Veterinary Hospital got a scow with a derrick and moved it alongside the animal. Men rigged a rope around the horse and it was hoisted out of the water.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

To-day will see the end of most of the house parties on Long Island, at Tuxedo, in Westchester County, and other country places, and while few of the guests are now living in town they will pass through, and the luncheon and dinner hours will find the fashionable restaurants crowded. Many persons will remain in town over to-morrow to attend one or more of several weddings.

Miss Harriet Sewell Smith is to be married to Tobias B. Johnstone on Wednesday evening next at the residence of her cousin, Mrs. Joel W. Thorne, 995 Madison Avenue. Mrs. Thorne will be her cousin's matron of honor and Miss Constance Drout of Brooklyn is to be the maid of honor. Mr. Johnstone's best man will be Robert Friedman, and the ushers are to be Dr. H. E. Sandiford, William D. Luhrs, Walter M. Phillips, and Joel W. Thorne.

***

Mrs. M. McKown Twombly has invitations out for a card party and tea at the Twombly country place at Madison, N. J.

The wedding of Philip F. Kobbé and Miss Mary W. Delehanty, whose engagement was announced some weeks since in this column, will take place at New Brighton on June 7. Mr. Kobbé is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Ferdinand Kobbé, whose home is Harbor Hill, at New Brighton, S. I. The Misses Helen, Marie, and Dorothea Kobbé are his sisters. Miss Delehanty is a daughter of Capt. Delehanty of Sailors' Snug Harbor.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Padelford of Washington are in town. They have closed their Washington home and have leased a cottage at Bar Harbor for the season.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Edmund G. Vaughan, (Miss Jarvis,) who arrived on the Celtic Sunday and who will soon go to Cuba, where their home is, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel M. Jarvis. Mr. and Mrs. Jarvis have opened Quaker Ridge, their country home at Mamaroneck.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Ross Curran (Miss Elise Postley) are booked to sail Friday on the Celtic and purpose remaining abroad until next Summer.

Oliver Perin's bachelor dinner will take place this evening at Delmonico's, and to-morrow evening William H. Gelshenen and Henry C. Cryder will entertain their respective best men and ushers at the same place. Mr. Cryder's marriage to Miss Hollins is set for June 7, and Mr. Gelshenen's to Miss Florence Carpenter will take place on June 8.

The wedding of Dudley Bates Lawrence, son of Mr. and Mrs. William V. Lawrence of 969 Fifth Avenue, and Miss Katherine Clitherall Birch, daughter of Mrs. George Anthony Birch of Birmingham, Ala., will take place to-morrow in that city. Miss Birch is a member of an old Southern family. Mr. Lawrence is a graduate of Yale, class of 1901, and of the New York Law School, class of 1903.

RUSH TRIP TO EUROPE.

Joe Weber Gets from Chicago to the Steamer on the Fly.

Joe Weber made a flying connection between Chicago and Europe yesterday. He and his stock company closed their successful Spring tour of the principal cities in Chicago on Snday night, caught a train over the Lake Shore Railroad at 3 o'clock on Monday morning, and arrived at the Grand Central Station at 7:50 yesterday morning. Mr. Weber's carriage was waiting for him. He drove to his home at 136 Madison Avenue for breakfast, later dropped in to take a look at his music hall, and was then hurried to the North German Lloyd pier in Hoboken, where he took passage on the Kronprinz. She sailed at 1 o'clock.

THEFTS AT BIJOU THEATRE.

Two Violins Stolen and Money from a Dressing Room.

Thieves visited the Bijou Theatre yesterday between the afternoon and evening performances of "The Music Master." In the evening it was discovered that $60 had been taken out of a small handbag in the dressing room of Minnie Dupree, who plays the part of the music master's daughter, and that two violins were missing from the orchestra room. One of the instruments is said to be worth $300. There were several robberies at this theatre last season.

HIPPODROME FOR CHICAGO.

Joseph M. Weber to Engineer $1,400,000 Enterprise.

CHICAGO, May 30.—Joseph M. Weber, late of the firm of Weber & Fields, has arranged with a number of Chicago and New York capitalists to erect in this city the Chicago Hippodrome, an institution patterned after the New York and London Hippodromes.

The enterprise will entail an expenditure of $1,400,000, and the building, which is to cover a full city block, will be erected by next February.

FRENCH WILLIAM TELL.

Woman Has a Lump of Sugar Shot Off Her Head by Hippodrome Marksman.

A woman volupteered last evening to have a lump of sugar shot off her head by Col. Bordeverry, the French marksman, at the Hippodrome, and she did. She said she was Madeleine Duchatelaies of 175 West Eighty-fifth Street. When the champion called for volunteers she stood up in one of the boxes, went on the stage, and didn't seem to mind the risk.

BOMBARDED BURGLARS WITH FIRECRACKERS

Lone Woman's Pyrotechnics Too Much for Robbers' Nerves.

THIEVES FLED IN A PANIC

Mrs. Baldwin of Stamford Couldn't Find Revolver, but the Substitute Worked Like a Charm.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 30.—Mrs. Charles Baldwin, the wife of a New York broker, who lives on Southfield Avenue, close to the Sound, has discovered the bluff pyrotechnic.

She put it into practice shortly before 1 o'clock this morning to such good purpose that two burglars who attempted to break into her house were so scared that it is believed they are running yet, for the police have been unable to find a trace of them. When Mrs. Baldwin made her discovery her husband had gone to New York and she was alone in the house, except for two servants, who are sound sleepers.

"I was awakened some time after midnight," Mrs. Baldwin told the police, "by the buzzing of the burglar alarm and the barking of a dog in the garden. I raised the window of my bedroom ever so quietly and looked out. There—and, mind you, Mr. Baldwin was in New York—were two big men trying to get in by the kitchen door!"

"Come on, Bill," she heard one of the men at the kitchen door say; "it's a lonely place and there's only a woman in the house. Let's bang it open!"

That rendered Mrs. Baldwin desperate. She put her hand into a drawer of the bureau hoping to find a revolver. She had a vague recollection of having put it there with a tin trumpet on election night. But the revolver was not there; only some firecrackers.

Mrs. Baldwin had an inspiration. She went as far away from the window as possible, and, striking a match, ignited the whole tangle of fuses. Then, running back, she threw them to the ground. The burglars were now shaking the door of the kitchen and prying away with a jimmy. Suddenly it seemed to them that Togo and all his warships had attacked them.

"B-r-r-lppp! Bang! Bang! Sptr-r-zzz-pp! Bang Bang!" went the firecrackers.

The burglars dropped their tools and groveled on the ground. There were cannons to right of them, cannons to left of them, and they felt they had blundered.

Mrs. Baldwin, who had not hoped for such a magnificent effect, clapped her hands to her ears, but her eyes, which were wide open, saw through the smoke that rose to the bedroom window two human rockets shoot along Southfield Avenue. They did not come back.

Then, having assured herself that the house was safe, Mrs. Baldwin dressed and went for the police.

HIS LIQUOR TUNNEL.

Where a Unionport Dealer Kept Illicit Champagne, Beer, and Whisky.

Detectives of the Westchester Station, dressed as fishermen, yesterday arrested Charles Booker of Scribben Point, Unionport, on a charge of selling liquor without a license. According to the police, a quantity of liquor was found by them stored in a tunnel, which led to an old well.

Detectives Dillon and Rappold and several policemen hired a boat from Booker, and as they were about to push it into the water one of them said:

"Can't you let us have some beer? We are going to be out all day and we will be thirsty."

Booker, it is alleged, then produced a case of beer. He was arrested and taken back to the house.

Every room was searched for liquor, without result. Then Rappold discovered the tunnel. It led underground about fifteen feet. There the police say they found champagne, beer, and whisky, cigars and cigarettes.

DEAF-MUTE'S FUNERAL.

Preacher Interprets Service to Deaf Mourners in Sign Language.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, May 30.—The funeral of Samuel S. Brewer, a deaf-mute, was held here to-day and was attended by his family, consisting of the wife and four children, all of whom are deaf and dumb. In order that they might understand the service a New York clergyman who uses the deaf and dumb sign language came to Mount Vernon and officiated. The clergyman first made the funeral oration to the friends and neighbors assembled and then interpreted it with his fingers in the sign language to the wife and children.

Mr. Brewer was fifty years old and he and his entire family were born bereft of their hearing and speech.

Ovation to Norwegian Councilors.

CHRISTIANIA, Norway, May 30.—The Norwegian members of the Council of State arrived here this morning from Stockholm, where they attended the sitting of the Council of State, at which the Ministers resigned after King Oscar had declined to sign the measure creating a separate Consular system for Norway. They were greeted by a large crowd at the railroad station, and were warmly cheered by the crowds there and in the adjacent streets.

Actors' Church Alliance Meeting.

The Actors' Church Alliance will hold its sixth annual convention with the New York Chapter to-day and to-morrow. Representatives of both Church and stage will be present as delegates. Business sessions will be held at St. Chrysostom's Parish Hall, Seventh Avenue and Thirty-ninth Street, this morning and this afternoon.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—There will be fair weather to-day except in the South Atlantic States and Florida, where showery weather will continue. There will be also showers in the East Gulf States. Thursday will be fair in all districts, except in the Southeastern States, with somewhat higher temperatures in the lake region and northern districts.

The winds along the New England coast and Middle Atlantic Coast will be mostly light and variable; South Atlantic Coast fresh west; Gulf Coast light and variable, becoming north on Texas Coast; on the lower lakes light northeast winds; upper lakes light and variable.

Steamers departing to-day for European ports will have variable winds and cloudy weather to the Grand Banks.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND THURSDAY.

Eastern New York—Partly cloudy to-day and Thursday; light, variable winds.

New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania—Fair and somewhat warmer Wednesday and Thursday; light, variable winds.

New England—Fair Wednesday and Thursday; light, variable winds.

Western New York—Fair to-day and Thursday; light, variable winds, mostly north.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

	1904.	1905		1904.	1905.
3 A. M.	62	68	4 P. M.	75	64
6 A. M.	64	67	6 P. M.	71	61
9 A. M.	66	64	9 P. M.	66	60
12 M.	69	69	12 P. M.	66	60

The thermometer at the Weather Bureau is 255 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 64; corresponding date 1904, 67; corresponding date for last twenty-five years, 64.

The thermometer registered 65 degrees at 8 A. M. and 61 degrees at 8 P. M. yesterday, the maximum temperature being 71 degrees at 1 P. M. and the minimum 60 degrees at 10 P. M. The humidity was 77 per cent. at 8 A. M. and 36 per cent. at 8 P. M.

MR. LOOMIS EXPLAINS.

Took Mercador Claim as Security for $5,000 Loaned Promoter.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Secretary Taft to-day again considered the Bowen-Loomis matter, and examined at some length a New York reporter who visited Caracas some time ago, and who published what purported to be a note from Mr. Loomis to Mr. Russell, the Secretary of Legation, notifying him that he would buy a portion of the Mercador claim. The letter itself was among the papers submitted to Secretary Taft by Mr. Bowen in the presentation of his case. Mr. Bowen said he found this among other papers in a box in the Legation safe after Mr. Loomis had left.

The reporter told Secretary Taft that Mr. Bowen had said that he wanted his side of the case presented, but that he did not care to be quoted. Thereupon he had placed a number of papers, including this letter, in the reporter's hands. The explanation of the letter, as contained in Mr. Loomis's statement to Secretary Taft, is in substance as follows:

"The Spanish Government sold a torpedo boat to the Government of Venezuela for 400,000 bolivars. Instead of the cash, it was arranged that the Venezuelan Government should turn over 1,000,000 bolivars in salt bonds at their face value. After reimbursing itself to the extent of 400,000 bolivars, the Spanish Government was to turn over the remainder of the salt bonds to the American Minister at Caracas, the proceeds to be applied to meeting certain claims against the Venezuelan Government.

"This arrangement was approved at Washington. Among these claims was one amounting to about 60,000 bolivars, due Mercador, a promoter and business man, on account of a contract; another 60,000 bolivars on account of the German Railway, and several minor claims. Mercedor sought a loan from A. F. Jaurett, who was at that time semi-officially attached to the American Legation. Jaurett lacked $3,000 of the necessary amount and borrowed it from Mr. Loomis, pledging a portion of the Mercador claim as security, and this was subsequently redeemed by the sale of a portion of the salt bonds to the banks. Mr. Loomis was on vacation and not in Caracas at the time, which accounts for the writing of the note to Mr. Russell. He received for his $5,000 just $5,080."

Secretary Taft does not now believe that it will be necessary to take the testimony of any witness besides Mr. Russell, now en route to Washington from Cartagena.

DENIES LITURGY REPORT.

Dr. van Dyke Says Winona Lake Assembly Favored the Plan.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 30.—Dr. Henry van Dyke, the author and divine, has returned to his home after his debate before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Winona Lake, Ind. It was reported from Winona Lake that the so-called liturgy which he submitted for voluntary use in churches had been rejected. Dr. van Dyke says that is not correct.

"The Assembly," he said, "was not asked to 'adopt' a Prayer Book, but simply to approve the way in which a collection of forms of service had been made for purely voluntary use in Presbyterian churches."

Dr. van Dyke is Chairman of the Committee on Forms, and has been working in preparing them since 1903. When asked what the real action of the Assembly was in regard to the so-called liturgy, he said:

"The Assembly after full debate took action in brief as follows: (1) We approve the way in which the committee has been doing its work—namely, by providing services drawn from Presbyterian sources and models, rather than by copying the Episcopal Book; (2) We instruct the committee to make a slight change in the form for baptism and to go on to complete their work by adding other forms of service for the dedication of a church, to ordination of elders, &c.; (3) We add to the committee the Moderator and four more pastors; (4) We authorize the committee if they can complete their work within a year to have it published by the Board of Publication and to print on the title page, 'For Voluntary Use in the Churches.' This is the action the Assembly really took, and it can be verified by reference to the clerk, Dr. William H. Roberts, of Philadelphia."

Many of the Presbyterian ministers have made a stand against the new publication on the ground that it is a liturgy.

ELEPHANT'S DASH TO DEATH.

Breaks from Executioners in Buffalo and Plunges Into Quarry.

Special to The New York Times.

BUFFALO, May 30.—Pirate, an elephant belonging to the Ringling Circus, had been on the rampage for the last three weeks, and had injured several keepers who sought to mollify him. When he arrived in Buffalo on Sunday he was so vicious that he had to be kept constantly in chains. So much trouble had he caused that the managers of the circus decided to have him killed.

Preparations were going on this afternoon to carry out the plan to do away with the elephant, the intention being to strangle him with chains. It may have been that he divined the purpose of the keepers, for he broke the chains which bound him twenty minutes before the time set for his execution.

On gaining his liberty Pirate rushed to East Ferry Street, where hundreds of urchins and several adults dispersed terror stricken, as, trumpeting loudly and with chains dangling from his feet, the four-ton beast appeared.

Pirate, at a rapid gait, went on for three blocks, and then turned in the direction of the Jamesthal quarry, where Pennell and his wife lost their lives. It will be recalled that Pennell was suspected of guilty knowledge of the murder of Edwin L. Burdick, and that in company with Mrs Pennell he drove his automobile over the quarry brink.

Pirate went near to the spot where the Pennells died and, like the automobile, swerved from the street just as he came to the highest point in the quarry. He was going so rapidly that the momentum carried him over a forty-foot embankment before he could stop. He hardly moved after stinking the rocks below. His neck was broken.

CIVIL WAR NURSE DEAD.

Mrs. Marie Weeks Manning, a Wealthy Woman, Who Did Much Good.

Mrs. Marie Weeks Manning, who had spent most of her life in doing good for other people, died in Brooklyn yesterday at the age of ninety. She was the widow of Richard Henry Manning, a wealthy zinc merchant. He died seventeen years ago.

In the civil war Mrs. Manning went to Annapolis to the soldiers' hospital there and treated the sick and wounded men of the Union Army. After the war she returned to Brooklyn, and since then she had been particularly interested in the Union veterans. She founded the Industrial Home for the Blind, in Gates Avenue, and the Home for Blind Women in Washington Avenue, Brooklyn. Besides these there were many other charities in which she was interested.

One son survives here, Henry S. Manning, who until recently was head of the firm of Manning, Maxwell & Moore, at 85 Liberty Street.

MR. CLEVELAND UPHOLDS BR'ER RABBIT'S DIGNITY

Ex-President's Interesting Article on the Cotton Tail.

TELLS HOW TO HUNT HIM

No Decent Man, He Says, Will Shoot a Rabbit Until It Is on the Run.

Grover Cleveland, ex-President, professor, and inveterate duck hunter, displays a new side of his character in an article headed "A word concerning rabbit hunting," which he contributes to the current issue of The Independent.

Mr. Cleveland dives into his topic by saying that some hunters "of the super-refined and dudish sort" deny to the rabbit a place among legitimate game, while others deem it necessary to excuse the admission of rabbits by calling them hares. "I regard all this as pure affectation and nonsense. I deem it not beneath my dignity and standing as a reputable gunner to write of the rabbit as an entirely suitable member of the game community; and in so doing I am not dealing with hares or any other thing except plain, little, everyday plebeian rabbits—sometimes appropriately called 'cotton tails.' I am not ashamed of their pursuit; and I count it by no means bad skill to force them by a successful shot to a topsy-turvy pause when at their best speed.

"Of course no decent man will shoot a rabbit while sitting, and I have known them to refuse to start for anything less than a kick or punch. After such a start the rabbit must in fairness be given an abundant chance to gain full headway, and when he has traversed the necessary distance for this, and is at his fastest gait, the hunter that shoots him has good reason to be satisfied with his marksmanship. I once actually poked one up and he escaped unhurt, though four loads of shot were sent after him."

Dogs must be relied on. Mr. Cleveland thinks that the fastest are not the best, because they are likely to scare the game into a hole at the start. Then the picture grows livelier.

"The baying of three or four good dogs steadily following a little cotton tail should be as exhilarating and as pleasant to ears attuned to the music as if the chase were for bigger game. As the music is heard more distinctly the hunter is allowed to flatter himself that his acute judgment can determine the route of the approaching game and the precise point from which an advantageous shot can be secured. The self-satisfied conceit aroused by a fortunate guess concerning this important detail, especially if supplemented by a fatal shot, should permit the lucky gunner to enjoy as fully the complacent pleasurable persuasion that the entire achievement is due to his sagacity, keenness, and skill as though the animal circumvented were a larger beast. In either case the hunter experiences the delight born of a well-fed sense of superiority and self-pride; and this, notwithstanding

BUTTLING, AT 30 TO 1, LED FROM END TO END

Long Chance Was Never Headed in the Parkway Handicap.

JACOBITE WON THE HUDSON

Paget's Colt, Ridden Out, Beat Jerry Wernberg—Big Crowd Witnesses the Gravesend Races.

The largest crowd of the racing year gathered at the Gravesend track yesterday, and filled both grand and field stands to the point where the overflow signal, which opened the gates to the infield, was as welcome as the success of the first winning favorite of the afternoon.

The crowd was of such size that the management was compelled to revise its former judgment on the effects that the increased price of admission have been supposed to have on the attendance, for the regular patrons of the grand stand cheerfully paid the $3 and $1.50 required respectively for men and women, and packed the big structure to the aisles, while the field stand was filled to the danger point, the visitors in that inclosure standing solidly massed on the lawn, and putting in the entire afternoon there, in spite of the fact that after the steeplechase, the second race on the card, had been run, the infield was opened to all who were willing to go into that portion of the grounds. With memories of Brooklyn Handicap Day in mind the crowd refused that seeming favor, however, and though spectators who could not find standing room anywhere else lined the rails from the furlong pole to the paddock turn, the opening of the infield furnished little real relief from the crush in the two public inclosures. It was estimated that about 30,000 spectators were present, nearly evenly divided between the two stands.

The results made a fairly even division between the backers and the layers, as two favorites, both at good prices, were returned winners, but there was one race, and that a chief event of the day's card, the Parkway Handicap, which, in its outcome, gave backers a thrill and a shock in one. This event, run as the fourth race, at one mile and a sixteenth, was won practically from start to finish by the long chance outsider Buttling, a three-year-old with ninety pounds up, and ridden by the lightweight boy Notter. Dolly Spanker, next to the top weight, with 114 pounds, and Odom riding, always was the favorite of the ten horses that ran, while Buttling, after going to 40 to 1 in the betting, was backed by J. L. McGinnis and his stable following to win a fortune, and went to the post at 30 to 1. Leonidas broke first, with Dolly Spanker second and Buttling third, but in the first few jumps, Buttling, with the advantage of the rail position, went to the front, and as the paddock turn was begun drew out a scant length before Kurtzman, which, after stumbling at the start, quickly recovered, and went on in the first flight. From the time that he showed his nose in the lead, Buttling was never headed, and drawing further away as he went on, finally galloped home an easy winner by four lengths from Dolly Spanker, which trailed in the middle of the crowd for nearly six furlongs, and then set out in a vain effort to overtake the pacemaker. In the run through the stretch at the finish, Major Daingerfield, twice a winner of the stakes, and yesterday running in the colors of P. J. Dwyer, ran through the crowd from the rear, and was third, three lengths behind Dolly Spanker and hips in front of Ostrich, fourth.

The first favorite to win in the course of obe afternoon was Jacobite, in the race for the Hudson Stakes, this colt, carrying the Paget colors, starting a 6-to-5 choice over Jerry Wernberg. The start was delayed for a time by the bad behavior of Lancastrian, from the Keene stable, which colt eventually got away in the lead, but promptly was passed by Jacobite, which held command for the remainder of the journey and won, ridden out, from Jerry Wernberg. The last-named was slow to begin, and had to be whipped away from the post.

The handicap steeplechase over the two-mile-and-a-half course, was a rather remarkable race, even of its kind, as of the eight runners four came to grief, one of these being Ogress, which, after leading over the last jump, made a bad landing and tumbled her rider. Imperialist, which never looked to have a chance until the rider of Ogress was off, then went on and won on the flat from Bacchanal, while Russell Sage, which fell on the last round of the field, was so much better than Mart Mullen, which did not fall, that when caught and remounted he finished third. Broadcloth, ridden by Martin, carried the colors of S. S. Brown to the first steeplechasing triumph of his career in the East this season in the opening race. Summary:

HILDEBRAND SUSPENDED.

Gravesend Officials Refer His Case to Stewards of Jockey Club.

The case of the noted jockey, Eugene Hildebrand, under investigation for his suspicious riding of the filly Duenna in the first race at the Gravesend track last Friday, when Duenna was beaten a head by the well-backed Last Cherry, was decided yesterday, so far as the power of the Stewards for The Brooklyn Jockey Club's meeting could go, and Hildebrand was suspended for the meeting at Gravesend, while his case was referred to the Stewards of The Jockey Club, with recommendations for further action by that body.

What the recommendations are has not been stated by the Gravesend Stewards, but the very fact that the chief body of the turf is called on to act makes out a serious matter for Hildebrand.

In the race in question Last Cherry, owned by Woodford Clay, and ridden by Lyne, was backed with complete confidence by some of the shrewdest bettors on the turf. In the running of the race Last Cherry and Duenna, the latter owned by Harry Payne Whitney, locked for the finish after Toots Mook, which led for the early part of the race, stopped and ran out at the head of the stretch. The finish between Last Cherry and Duenna was a singular one, in which Last Cherry was eased up at the finish, while Duenna simply galloped at her side, seeming able to go up to her, but with Hildebrand making no move on her. Hildebrand finished with one foot out of his stirrup, and when called on by the Stewards to explain his lethargic riding, gave as his excuse that he had lost the stirrup, and could not do better. The Stewards, for the occasion, Philip J. Dwyer, President of The Brooklyn Jockey Club; Andrew Miller, one of the Stewards of The Jockey Club, and J. G. Follansbee, a prominent owner of race horses and a member of The Jockey Club and of the National Steeplechase and Hunt Association, made full inquiry and continued their investigation Saturday and Monday, and yesterday reached the decision that Hildebrand's ride was such as to justify his suspension.

None of them would talk of the case, but it is known that the investigation included inquiry into the betting on the race and influences which have surrounded Hildebrand of late. Hildebrand, a California boy, came into prominence in the East only last Spring, when he was brought to New York by J. C. Yeager, the Cincinnati bookmaker, horse owner, and plunger, who practically developed the boy after finding him riding on the smaller tracks of California. Hildebrand at once sprang into prominence, and became the fashion, his manager being able to pick the best mounts for him, and later in the season, Hildebrand was engaged by the great racing stable of H. B. Duryea, then racing all the horses of the William C. Whitney estate. With the Duryea horses Hildebrand easily led the jockeys of the country, and this Spring was re-engaged by Harry Payne Whitney, who now races the big stable formed by his father. Yeager still has a contract with Hildebrand, but under the agreement with the Whitney Stable the Whitney establishment has the first call, though the boy still is under the management of William Schaul, who acts as trainer for Yeager. It is said that Yeager did not bet on the race in which Duenna was beaten, but other persons who are supposed to be close to Hildebrand are under suspicion. Hildebrand has obtained somewhere about $30,000 a year and had every prospect of being able to ride at light weights for several seasons to come.

CRICKETERS' BUSY DAY.

Low Scoring Was the Feature of Many of the Local Matches.

Cricketers were out in force yesterday. From the early start made in the games, two innings, or at least part of the second inning, was played in most of the contests.

At Prospect Park, the Brooklyn Zingari and Brooklyn Nomads had their first contest in the Metropolitan League championship series. The game was evenly contested, and resulted in favor of the Zingari on the first innings' score by 12 runs. Had the two innings been completed, however, the result would have been reversed, for when time was called the Nomads needed but 5 runs to win, and had five crickets still to fall. Score: Brooklyn Zingari, 81 and 32; Brooklyn Nomads, 69, and 40 for 5 wickets.

The Kings County and Kings County St. George elevens also played a League championship game at Prospect Park, where the latter sustained an unlooked for severe defeat by no less than an innings and 70 runs. H. C. Smart and C. B. Reece both played capital cricket for the winners. Score: Kings County St. George, 31 and 58; Kings County, 159.

Columbia Oval met with a surprise at Prospect Park, where the Thistles defeated them handily by 53 runs. J. E. Gillette batted well for 30 for the winners. Score: Columbia Oval, 35; Thistles, 88.

A game which aroused considerable enthusiasm was the contest between the West Indians and Orientals at Prospect Park. The latter made a good fight against their more experienced competitors, but were defeated by 32 runs. Score: West Indians, 125; Orientals, 93.

Junior teams of Columbia Oval, formerly All Angels, and Brooklyn played a full two innings game at Prospect Park, where the Columbia boys won by 46 runs. A feature of the match was the bowling of H. Zoller for the winners. He had the remarkable analysis of 6 wickets for 1 run. Score: Columbia Oval Juniors, 39 and 80; Brooklyn Juniors, 26 and 47.

The Manhattan Club played at Prospect Park between teams captained by W. Adam and A. Newsum. The eleven of the latter won by totals of 139 to 128.

At Staten Island the Staten Island Cricket Club played its first game in the championship match between its teams A and B, the latter winning by 93 runs. A. G. Laurie scored, and was presented with a silver cup. C. H. E. Griffith also played well. Vigorous innings for the winners, while W. F. Keenan added 37. For Team A the chief scorers were E. H. L. Steinthal, 28, and H. Manley, 23. Score: Staten Island, Team B, 244; Team A, 151.

AUTO RACE SURPRISE AT EMPIRE CITY MEET

Wurgis Wins Exciting Race by One-fifth of a Second.

NEW CAR GETS TWO EVENTS

Guy Vaughan Captures Diamond Cup After Giving Up Effort for 1,000-Mile Record—Crowd at Track.

Automobilists who frequent track meets have often claimed that the racing interest in an event is confined to the start and the finish. It is quite true that the majority of contests, after the fliers have begun to roll up the dust along the track, are suddenly transformed into a procession. A pleasing exception was enjoyed yesterday at the Empire City track, near Yonkers, by the four or five thousand persons who were attracted to that popular racing headquarters for the purpose of seeing some new aspirants for auto racing honors try for records. No records were broken, but in the three-mile event for the Mount Vernon Cup one of the finest and most exciting races was seen that has been run on any automobile track in the metropolitan district for over a year.

There were two contestants, Dan Wurgis, driving the new Reo Bird, a thirty-two-horse-power car that arrived in the morning fresh from the factory, and Guy Vaughan, driving his forty-horse-power Decauville. The latter was a thoroughly tried car that has won many races, and had just concluded an attempt to establish a thousand-mile record around the track, but owing to tire troubles and a hard rainstorm was forced to quit at the conclusion of 500 miles. The Reo Bird, a name that was not given in vain, made its initial appearance a few minutes before in the five-mile Diamond Cup contest and was defeated by Vaughan by twenty seconds.

Wurgis and his mechanicians had not been idle during the interval, and they had done a little tinkering to their car that made it run somewhat easier. So when the rival racers got away at the crack of the pistol there was some surprise to see the little Reo take the lead.

"Pretty good for a new car, but wait till Vaughan lets himself out," said one of the sententious veterans.

At the end of the first mile Vaughan was still behind, not much, to be sure, but still enough to lose. He made a grand effort coming around the turn into the homestretch for the second mile, and for a while the racers were what the turf followers would call neck and neck. The dust rolled up in great clouds behind the cars, but Wurgis held to the pole in grand fashion, and, what was better, held to his lead. Barely a length separated the cars as they flew past the grand stand for the second mile. The positions were practically unchanged during the final mile. Each driver crowded on every particle of speed, but the new Reo Bird proved the significance of her name and fairly flew down the stretch, passing the line a loudly applauded winner, just one-fifth of a second ahead of Vaughan. The time for the three miles was 3:20 4-5, with an even 3:21 for Vaughan.

In addition to this victory the Reo also captured the five-mile run for the Yonkers Cup, beating Charles G. Wridgeway in his twenty-four-horse-power Peerless, in the time of 5:39 3-5. Summary:

Dealers' Handicap, Two Miles.—First Heat—Won by American Automobile Storage Company's 12 horse power Franklin, driven by Alfred F. Comacho. Time—2:51. Wayne Automobile Company's 16 horse power Wayne, driven by Frank Kniffen, second. Time—3:18. Percy Owen's 24 horse power Winton, driven by C. A. Carlson, third.

Second Heat—Won by Ardsley Motor Car Company's 30 horse power Peerless, driven by W. S. Howard, (1:15.) Time—7:06 2-5. C. J. Wridgeway's 24 horse power Peerless, driven by owner, second.

Final Heat—Won by Ardsley Motor Car Company's 30 horse power Peerless. Time—7:00. Decauville Automobile Company's 12 horse power Decauville, second; American Automobile Storage Company's 12 horse power Franklin, third.

MOTOR CYCLE HILL CLIMB.

Spencer and Kellogg Win the Two Contests at Fort George.

The motor cycle hill climbing competition yesterday held under the auspices of the New York Motor Cycle Club brought out a good number of entries, and fast time was made. The motor cyclists went up Fort George Hill, the distance being about half a mile, with a 10 per cent. grade. The hill is paved with Belgian blocks. C. A. Spencer of Springfield, Mass., who won the contest for racing motor cycles, fell on a wet spot in the road near the starting line, but escaped with minor bruises. He won the event handily, beating his only competitor, D. B. Brown of this city. The cyclists had two trials, and Spencer's best time was 0:41 2-5. The touring class event brought out more starters, and ten finished, Stanley T. Kelley of Bridgeport, Conn., taking the prize. The summaries:

FAST PLAY AT TENNIS.

Yale Veterans Win on New York Courts—Doubles at Plainfield.

Spirited lawn tennis matches in the doubles provided the most noteworthy sport yesterday in the continuation of the big open tournament under the direction of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association on the dirt courts of the New York Lawn Tennis Club, Manhattan Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-third Street. The appearance of the former Yale champion pair, Harold H. Hackett and John A. Allen, indicated that neither had lost any of his skill, and they won two lively matches in straight sets.

The first pair against the Yale men was that composed of O. M. Bostwick and Dr. Wadsworth. They volleyed and lobbed well, but Hackett and Allen worked the ball along their side lines for passes so frequently that they took the match by easy scores at 6—2 and 6—4.

In the next round the Knickerbocker Field Club's pair, Rising and Roberts, faced the Yale veterans. They had but little success, as both Hackett and Allen worked the ball along the side lines for passes, and when they came up to the net they invariably won the point by the prettiest sort of cross-court shots.

An international flavor is lent to the doubles, as Clarence Hobart and Van Kerke, the Holland player, have paired, and will meet one of the teams in the competitions to-day. Wylie C. Grant and Robert Le Roy, the winners of the international doubles at Homburg, Germany, also won both of their matches, and will probably meet Hackett and Allen to-day.

Only one match was played in the singles, Robert T. Bryan winning his place in the semi-final match by defeating H. Torrence, the expert of the Englewood Field Club. Summary:

Men's Open Singles.—Third Round—Robert T. Bryan, New York Lawn Tennis Club, defeated H. Torrence, Englewood Field Club, 6—4, 6—3.

Manhattan Championship Doubles.—First Round —Wylie C. Grant and Robert Le Roy, New York and Columbia University, defeated Billings and Noyes, Crescent Athletic Club, 6—2, 6—4; Trask and Bogert, West Side Lawn Tennis Club, defeated Robertson and Todd, West Side Lawn Tennis Club, 6—4, 4—6, 6—2; Jennings and Nitchie, Throgg's Neck, defeated Beckley and Wagner, West Side Lawn Tennis Club, 4—6, 6—3, 6—4; Wagner and Partner, West Side Lawn Tennis Club, defeated A. S. Cragin and Partner, Seventh Regiment Lawn Tennis Association, by default.

Second Round—Trask and Bogert, West Side Lawn Tennis Club, defeated Jennings and Nitchie, Throgg's Neck, 6—2, 6—1; Grant and Le Roy, New York and Columbia University, defeated Wagner and Partner, West Side Lawn Tennis Club, by default; Hackett and Allen, Crescent Athletic Club, defeated Bostwick and Dr. Wadsworth, West Side Lawn Tennis Club, 6—2, 6—4.

Third Round—Hackett and Allen, Crescent Athletic Club, defeated Roberts and Rising, Knickerbocker Field Club, 6—2, 6—4.

The first of the championship lawn tennis tournaments of the East Jersey League was won yesterday by Mrs. B. C. Edgar and S. Dunham of the Ilderan Outing Club, Rahway, N. J. They took the final championship match in the mixed doubles on the courts of the Plainfield Country Club, defeating Miss Hobson and E. S. H. Pendergast of the Bergen Point Lawn Tennis Club by the score of 6—4, 6—3.

The result of this match was not expected to be so one-sided as Miss Hobson and her partner, Pendergast, had accomplished some forceful racquet work in the semi-finals. The Ilderan team proved remarkably aggressive all the way through the contest, and won by comparatively easy scores in all of the games of the two sets. The summary:

Mixed Doubles Championship.—Semi-final Round—Mrs. B. C. Edgar and S. Dunham, Ilderan Outing Club, Rahway, defeated Miss Marcus and W. C. Dennert, Danforth Lawn Tennis Club, Jersey City, 6—2, 4—6, 6—3. Miss Hobson and E. S. H. Pendergast, Bergen Point Lawn Tennis Club, defeated Miss E. Condict and E. Newkirk, Jersey City Golf Club, 6—4, 6—2.

Final and Championship Round.—Mrs. B. C. Edgar and S. Dunham, Ilderan Outing Club, Rahway, defeated Miss Hobson and E. S. H. Pendergast, Bergen Point Lawn Tennis Club, 6—4, 6—3.

The annual open lawn tennis tournament of the Staten Island Ladies' Club will begin on the turf courts of the club at Livingston, S. I., on Tuesday, June 6. The meeting is held under the direction of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, and the events to be contested will include women's singles, women's doubles, and mixed doubles. There will be first and second prizes in each event. The committee in charge of the tournament is composed of Miss Edith M. Donald, Mrs. K. P. Emmons, and Miss M. Adelaide Irving. It is expected that all of the clubs in the metropolitan district will send entries. Entries close with Miss Edith M. Donald, Fourth Street, New Brighton, S. I., on June 3.

NEW YORK HORSES WIN.

Vanderbilt Entries, Mrs. Gerken, and Judge Moore Get Blue Ribbons.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 30.—The Philadelphia Horse Show on St. Martin's Green, at Wissahickon Heights, to-day was spoiled for the spectators by rain, but it did not seriously interfere with the judging of the various classes shown. Blue ribbons were awarded as follows:

Hackneys in harness, 15 hands and not exceeding 15.3, available for road work in gig or dogcart.—Won by La Belle Choose, b. m.; W. H. Moore.

XAVIER ATHLETES WON.

Captured Point Trophy in Close Finish at Brooklyn A. C. Games.

The Xavier Athletic Club won the point trophy at the games held yesterday under the auspices of the Brooklyn Athletic Club at Grand Street Park, Maspeth, L. I. The West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association led with 13 points until the last event, which was the two-mile run, when Harry Coates and B. Freeman, both of the Xavier Club, finished as named and put the Xaviers in the lead with 19 points. Freeman and Coates scored 16 of the points for the Xavier Club. The summary:

100-Yard Dash, Handicap.—Won by Charles Tousar, Sloane Athletic Association, 9½ yards; J. J. O'Keefe, St. Bartholomew Athletic Club, (7½ yards,) second; G. Cassenas, West Side Branch Y. M. C. A., (7½ yards,) third. Time—0:10.

300-Yard Run, Handicap.—Won by A. J. Crockett, West Side Branch Y. M. C. A., (17 yards;) F. Martieusse, Brooklyn Central Branch Y. M. C. A., (20 yards,) second; G. Cassenas, West Side Branch Y. M. C. A., (17 yards,) third. Time—0:33 1-5.

880-Yard Run, Novice.—Won by R. P. Tracy, West Side Branch Y. M. C. A.; John Allen, Xavier Athletic Club, second; John McDonald, Mott Haven Athletic Club, third. Time—2:13 4-5.

600-Yard Run, Handicap.—Won by C. J. Clark, Irish American Athletic Association, (20 yards;) Frank Hanlon, Mohawk Athletic Club, (18 yards,) second; A. E. Ward, West Side Branch Y. M. C. A., (34 yards,) third. Time—1:16 2-5.

75-Yard Dash, Novice.—Won by William Cook, Mott Haven Athletic Club; W. F. Greene, Xavier Athletic Club, second; C. J. Corlon, Brooklyn Athletic Club, third. Time—0:06 2-5.

Two-Mile Run, Handicap.—Won by Harry Coates, Xavier Athletic Club, (160 yards;) B. Freeman, Xavier Athletic Club, (160 yards,) second; Percy Smallwood, Pastime Athletic Club, (180 yards,) third. Time—10:50.

Ungua-Corinthian's Opening.

The Ungua Corinthian Yacht Club held its formal opening of the season at its clubhouse yesterday with the raising of the club burgee, informal catboat races, and a dinner dance. The entire fleet went into commission for the occasion and made a fine appearance, with every flag flying and all sails set as they bore down the bay.

COLUMBIA'S CREW WON IN SENIOR EIGHT RACE

TITUS TOOK SENIOR SINGLES

N. Y. A. C. Sculler Led a Good Field in the Event for Juniors—Fuessel First in the Short Dash.

Columbia University made a poor showing in the thirty-ninth regatta of the Harlem Regatta Association, held on the Harlem River yesterday. Much was expected of the Morningside collegians, but not until the last race did they show prominently. In this event they had the Nassau Boat Club opposed to them, and the race proved to be one of the best of the day, Columbia winning by a length.

The course yesterday was a mile and a quarter, where formerly it has been a mile. In the morning a strong wind made the water choppy and interfered with the oarsmen considerably. The Speedway was lined with enthusiasts, while hundreds viewed the races from craft along the courses.

Champions Take First Game from Brooklyn, but Lose the Second.

Twenty-five thousand persons saw the morning and afternoon games between the New York and Brooklyn teams at the Polo Grounds yesterday. The attendances were surprisingly large in view of the advantage the champions held in the championship race and their manifest superiority over Hanlon's men, but it showed that the local men still have the admiration of the "rooters," notwithstanding the Dreyfuss incident, and they proposed to give their favorites a good send-off on their tour, which begins to-day at Brooklyn, and will last until June 24.

With McGinnity in the box in the morning game yesterday, and with Scanlon to oppose him, the New Yorks had no trouble in winning by a score of 7 to 2, chiefly by good batting. In the afternoon game, however, the Brooklyns turned the tables and won by 4 to 3. Strickletts use of the wet ball was responsible for the victory, for although the champions collected enough hits to capture an ordinary game, they were so scattered that had Strickletts received the proper support not a run should have been scored by the New Yorks. A bad fumble by Owens in the sixth inning gave Browne second, and he tallied on Bresnahan's hit to centre. The other two runs were the result of two singles, Lumley's failure to stop Browne's hit and a bad throw by Batch.

Brooklyn's victory was due to the "squeeze" play in the tenth inning, the first time it has succeeded at the Polo Grounds. With Lewis at third, Gessler at first, and only one out, Lewis darted for home, and at the same time Bergen bunted to the pitcher. Lewis could not possibly have been retired, but Bergen was put out at first. The visitors scored two runs in the fourth, one of which was earned, on a base on balls, Owens's single, Lewis's out and Dobbs's nice hit to centre field. Browne's miss of Sheckard's fly gave them another run in the fifth.

Lewis's fielding at short was a brilliant feature of the game. He was conspicuous in two double plays, which for quickness and accuracy of throwing were of the sensational order.

DOUBLE VICTORY FOR PITTSBURG

PITTSBURG, May 30.—In the morning game to-day St. Louis was shut out by Pittsburg in a fast, snappy, and clean game. Wagner's batting and base running were the features. Pittsburg was in fine batting trim in the second game, and would have made the score much higher if Dunleavy had not been so effective in right field. The scores:

CHICAGO, 1; CINCINNATI, 0.

CINCINNATI, May 30.—Chicago won the morning game from Cincinnati by bunching a base on balls and two hits in the fifth inning. Barry, in trying to score from second on a hit in the ninth, was thrown out at the plate, ending the game. The afternoon contest was stopped by rain in the second inning. The score:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Dougherty's Misjudgment of a Fly Ball Costs New York the Game.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 30.—Only one of the two games scheduled between the Athletics and New York teams was played here to-day, owing to the weather conditions. The morning game was started in a shower, and was played throughout under leaden skies, which promised to interfere at any minute. The Athletics were finally returned a winner by the score of 6 to 5, but only after the visitors had assumed the lead in their half of the ninth inning, and the home team were pulled through by Dougherty's poor fielding. Rain caused a postponement of the afternoon game, much to the disappointment of 14,143 spectators.

The morning contest was won by the home team after a heart-breaking finish, which first threw the spectators into despair, and then drove them into paroxysms of delight and cheering over the victory. New York made a gallant effort to pull the game out of the fire, and succeeded in getting a lead of one run, only to have victory wrested from them in the Athletics' final effort at bat. With two out and the score tied at five runs each, Dougherty allowed Knight's fly to drop safely over his head, sending Barton home from second with the winning run. The score:

TWO DEFEATS FOR CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, May 30.—Detroit shut out Chicago to-day in the first game, the score being 1 to 0. The game was slow and uninteresting, lasting ten innings. Detroit also won the second game by 3 to 2. The visitors bunched their hits, and would have won by a larger score but for poor base running. The scores:

TWO VICTORIES FOR BOSTON.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Boston batted out a victory in the final inning of the morning game to-day. Criger was sent to bat for McGovern and Unglaub for Winter in the ninth inning, the former being passed to first and the latter singling. Selbach followed with a double and Parent with a single, scoring three runs. In the afternoon game the local team was shut out before the largest crowd of the season. A base on balls and an error were responsible for the visitors' runs. The scores:

HAMBURG IS SECOND YACHT AT LIZARD

Reaches the Finish 22 Hours After the Atlantic Crosses.

BOTH BOATS ARE BECALMED

Atlantic Unable to Reach Needles to Beat Record, but Has Hours to Spare.

LONDON, May 30.—The Hamburg, representative of Germany in the international race for the Kaiser's Cup, is second of the yachts to reach the finish line. She passed the Lizard at 7:19 P. M., and signalled her arrival to the Lizard light just thirteen days two hours and four minutes after the starting gun sounded off Sandy Hook. Her time is twenty-two hours three minutes slower than that made by the Atlantic, though in effect she was really twenty-three hours behind the American schooner. She was abeam of the Scilly Islands at 8:30 o'clock this morning, while the Atlantic passed the light station there at 9:37 the previous day. The Hamburg was becalmed as the Atlantic had been, and took ten hours to make the finish line.

The German was sighted at 5 o'clock in the morning practically becalmed. She reached the station five hours later, making less than four knots an hour. A southwesterly wind was blowing at the time, but it was scarcely more than a zephyr. The same conditions had met the Atlantic the previous day immediately after she passed the light station. All was reported well aboard the German, and no accident had been met with.

Capt. Coerper, the German Naval Attaché, who represented the Kaiser at the line, wired Atlantic's victory to the Emperor and received an answering cable to congratulate the American in his Majesty's name. A personal congratulatory cable awaits Wilson Marshall at Southampton from the Kaiser.

The Atlantic continues to be beset by feathery winds in her effort to reach the Needles within the Endymion's time. She was still ninety miles off at 3:45 P. M., Greenwich time, this afternoon, waiting for a freshening breeze. She then had twenty-six hours to make the point within the record, and even drifting as she was could do it. She had not arrived at a late hour.

When Capt. Edward Peters of the Hamburg was informed at the finish line by megaphone of the time made by the Atlantic he expressed the greatest astonishment at the achievement. He had not believed it possible that any of the yachts could make so remarkable a showing in the trip across. He knew when he reached the Scilly Islands that the Atlantic had beaten him, but supposed that she had arrived within four or five hours of his own record. Until the Scillys were reached the Germans, knowing only their own unusual showing, supposed they were in that race and would succeed in lifting the coveted trophy.

Herr Teitjens, the Hamburg's managing owner, said he had expressed the belief that the Atlantic would win before the start. "Our boat is no match for her with equal conditions. I realize that we have a very fleet boat, but I can't see how we can compete successfully against a vessel of that type with anything like the same kind of winds. She ought to beat us a knot an hour," which is just about what she did.

Endymion Reported by Wireless.

The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, which arrived off Nantucket yesterday, reported by wireless that she had passed the Endymion at 10 P. M. on May 26 in longitude 30.22 west and in latitude 47 north. This is about the position the Atlantic had reached twenty-four hours before, showing that Commodore Lauder's boat ought to be sighted off the Scilly Islands within a few hours if she, too, has not been becalmed as the two leaders have been.

BEDOUIN WINS TIME CUP.

Makes Speediest Run Over Course in Harlem Yacht Club Races.

Twenty-five yachts representing five different clubs competed in the twenty-third annual regatta of the Harlem Yacht Club yesterday off City Island and completed a programme of interesting races. J. W. Alker's Alert and W. Strauss's Anna were the winners in the thirty-three-foot classes for sloops and yawls, while the Firefly, Memory, Wahneta, Vaquero, and Ace were the other victors.

The start was made in a fresh breeze from the eastward at 12:15. The yawl Anna was first away, close hauled on the port tack and to windward of her only competitor, H. M. Raborg's Memory. J. W. Alker's crack sloop Alert led the way in the thirty-three-foot class, with the Bedouin second and Kathryn third.

The yawls and the sloops in the thirty-three and twenty-seven foot classes had a mark a mile went to Mattinnicock Point for their windward run. From there they turned a mark off Delancey Point, thence to the finish off Belden's Point. It was a broad reach with baloonsail from the Mattinnicock mark to Delancey Point and a run home. The wind canted to the southeast late in the afternoon, making it a close reach home. A very pretty sight the fleet made as it bowled along with the rails awash. W. J. Fowler's Bedouin won the Williams Cup for the fastest time for club boats over the course.

NEW YORK YACHT CLUB CUPS.

W. Butler Duncan, Jr., Again Wins One-Design Race at Glen Cove.

The opening regatta for the Spring cups of the New York Yacht Club was decided at Glen Cove yesterday with four races, interest centring in the meeting of the old rivals, Mineola and Yankee, and in the first club race of the one-design Herreshoff thirty-foot sloop class, which was expected to bring out a full roster of the eighteen boats.

Fourteen answered the preparatory gun, and were away well together. W. Butler Duncan's Dahinda took the lead at the start, and held it around the nineteen-and-a-half-mile course, closely pressed all the way by Cord Meyer's Atair. Each of the boats had won a previous race, and their contest was watched with keenest interest. Nine seconds separated them at the end, Dahinda winning by that margin, with Carlita a good third. Maid of Meudon and Ibis were the only others near her. J. W. Hanan's Nautilus was eighth.

Mineola and Yankee had a pretty race, which the former won by a minute and forty-seven seconds by quicker work at the turns. The summary follows:

RACES AT INDIAN HARBOR.

Tartan Wins Event for Raceabouts and Robin Hood the Handicap.

Interest in the opening of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club was divided yesterday between the ocean yacht race and the contests on the bay. The Atlantic's record performance, the Hamburg's arrival, and the whereabouts of Commodore George Lauder's Endymion occupied their full share of attention. The race was discussed from the hour of rendezvous at noon until the fleet anchored at sundown.

All the yachts enrolled except the flagship participated in the commissioning ceremonies. In the flotilla were Oneida, E. C. Benedict; Granpus, L. D. Armstrong; Kesteral, E. B. Hart, Jr.; Maya, G. B. Watts; Betty, Dr. J. S. Tanner; Acushla, E. C. Ray; Katrina, W. S. Gilmore; Adele, C. E. Brooks; Tartan, Gordon L. Pirie, and the famous Robin Hood, George E. Gartland.

The afternoon was devoted to a race for the raceabout class and a club handicap. Four Larchmont boats and one Indian Harbor entry contested in the former class. A. H. Pirie's Tartan winning from A. C. Bostwick's Mystral, Roy A. Ranier's Invader, Jr., Adrian Iselin, third's, Nora, and A. B. Alley's Pretty Quick.

In the club handicap the famous Robin Hood, George E. Gartland, owner, won in 6:45. The summaries follow:

Raceabout class. Start, 2:35 P. M. Order of finish:

Tartan, (A. H. Pirie,) 6:08:05; Nora, (A. Iselin, 3d,) 6:18:58; Mystral, (A. C. Bostwick,) 6:21, and Invader, Jr., (R. A. Rainey,) 6:29. Pretty Quick, (A. Bailey,) did not finish.

Club Handicap. Start, 2:50 P. M. Order of finish.

Robin Hood, (G. E. Gartland,) 6:56:35; Heron, (John Lebouttillier,) 7:00:45, and Kenosha, (C. Mallory,) 7:04:12. Acushla, (E. C. Ray,) did not finish.

ATLANTIC'S OPENING RACES.

Big Fleet Watches Small Craft Contest a Good Series of Races.

The Atlantic Yacht Club went into commission at Sea Gate yesterday and signalized the event with a series of interesting races between sloops in Class L and below. Commodore Reid, aboard the Rheclair, saluted the club burgee as it was hoisted on the club staff at noon. The fleet then dressed ship and proceeded to the course, from the club dock to West Bank Light and return.

Interest centred in Class Q principally, in which several new boats just launched competed, between which the rivalry was very keen. John R. Brophy's Ojigwan, Hendon Chubb's Cockatoo II. and W. H. Child's More Trouble, finished in that order. In Class N Vivian II. won, with Red Wing second. In Class P Lizanna was first, Huntress second, and Keller third. Hunrse was withdrawn. In Class II, Della won, with Dita second.

RACE FOR MOROSINI CUP.

Fourteen One-Design Sloops Compete for the Silver Trophy.

Interest in the Sea Cliff Yacht Club's opening races yesterday centred in the contest for the handsome silver trophy offered by Miss Guilla Morosini to the 18-foot sloop in the new one-design class which finished first over the nine-mile course laid out in the inside harbor. The trophy is to be won twice to become the permanent property of the yacht owner.

Fourteen unnamed yachts just off the ways competed for the prize.

CRESCENT'S EASY VICTORY.

Toronto University Lacrosse Team Defeated by 6 Goals to 3.

The Crescent Athletic Club lacrosse team defeated the Toronto University twelve by the score of 6 goals to 3 at Bay Ridge yesterday. The game at times was very rough and had to be stopped quite often on account of injuries to players.

The home team scored five goals in one in the first half by superior team work. Nash, the goal keeper for Toronto, was off in his game and failed to stop the ball on several occasions, which enabled the Crescents to score in the first half. The visitors played an improved game in the second half, and Spiers shot a goal, which was quickly followed by Graham. O'Rourke scored the only point during the second half for the Crescents. The line-up followed:

Toronto University.	Position.	Crescent A. C.
Nash	Goal	Rose
Phillips	Point	Allen
Doane	Cover point	Miller
Lalle	First defense	De Casanova

HOLIDAY GOLF CUPS KEEP PLAYERS BUSY

Public Links Crowded and Club Members Out in Force.

WOMEN MEET AT ENGLEWOOD

John Reid, St. Andrew's Veteran Golfer, Wins a Prize—Double Event at Baltusrol.

Every golf course in the metropolitan district was thronged with players yesterday, and scores of special matches and club handicaps were held. The public links were also crowded, the number of eager players at Van Cortlandt Park being so great that during the afternoon there was a waiting list of over one hundred young men and women patiently standing in line for their turn to drive off.

Nine new holes were opened on the public course at Forest Park, Brooklyn. These, added to the old nine holes, give the golf links there a playing distance of 4,600 yards. The greens were in admirable condition. The first match played over the enlarged course was a mixed foursome between Mr. and Mrs. George E. Perry, who met Mrs. E. H. Hoxie and Samuel Stark, members of the Brooklyn Golf Club. The latter pair conceded eight strokes handicap, but they were defeated by two holes.

The Englewood Golf Club held a series of matches for both men and women. Mrs. S. F. Lefferts won the putting contest for women with 94 strokes for the eighteen holes, and Miss Alma Howe was second.

In the men's competition for the Austin Cup, E. Mortimer Barnes won the trophy making the new competitive record of 78 strokes for the long eighteen hole course He deserved his honor, for he was the only scratch contestant. Two others tied with Barnes at 78 net, but Barnes got the award. In addition, there was an interesting four-ball match, which was won by W. H. Sykes, Jr., and A. E. Philbrick with a net score of 70 strokes. The leaders in these events were:

	Gross.	cap.	Net.
E. M. Barnes	78	0	78
G. A. Graham	87	9	78
E. De Forest	90	12	78
A. C. Sherwood	91	12	79

AMERICAN WOMEN WIN.

Six Eligible for Third Round in British Golf Championship.

LONDON, May 30.—The American participants in the ladies' British golf championship contest, which opened at Cromer, Norfolk, to-day, held their own well, six out of the nine American entrants passing to the third round, which will be played to-morrow. Their play to-day was closely watched and expert opinion credits the Americans with a good chance of reaching the final. The Americans played steady golf, and the winners clearly outplayed their opponents.

Miss Georgianna Bishop of Bridgeport, Conn., and the present champion of the United States, beat Mrs. Sumpter of Hunstanton by three up and two to play. Miss Mary B. Adams of Boston won her match at the nineteenth hole. Mrs. W. H. Martin, who is playing as an entrant from New York, though a resident of England, won by one up.

Miss Margaret Curtis of Boston, Mass., beat Miss Sessions of Sundridge Park by six up and four to play, and Miss Harriet Curtis, her sister, beat Mrs. Cockroft of Huddersfield by three up and two to play. Miss N. Evans of Woolton beat Mrs. Samuel Bettle of Philadelphia by five up and four to play. Mrs. S. Hunter of Woking beat Miss Frances C. Griscom of Philadelphia, an ex-American champion, by one hole.

FATHER OF GOLF WINS.

John Reid a Victor in St. Andrew's Foursome Competition.

John Reid, Jr., and W. T. Stern turned in the best gross score yesterday in the 36-hole handicap foursome competition at the St. Andrew's Golf Club, near Chauncey, Westchester County. They were the only scratch pair in a large field of starters, and their united gross was 144 strokes. They lost the handicap prize by four strokes, that honor going to John Reid, the veteran St. Andrew's golfer, and who is popularly known as the father of the game in America, and Harry Holbrook. Their handicap was 20 strokes, giving them a net score of 140. The cards are:

John Reid, Sr., and H. Holbrook	160	20—140
John Reid, Jr., and W. T. Stern	144	0—144
R. B. Tillinghast and G. Abbott	183	23—145

Kelso, 104, 15, 89; Frank Sears, 95, 6, 89.

Ward Wins Montclair Golf Cup.

John M. Ward won the final match for the May golf cup yesterday on the Montclair Golf Club links. He defeated Harold Wilcox, the ex-metropolitan champion, by 2 up and 1 to play. Over forty members took part in the holiday handicap, and very good scores were made. Hugo Reid won the prize with a net score of 62 strokes from 23 handicap. M. Whitlatch made the lowest gross score of the day, 72 strokes. The leaders were:

Hugo Reid, 85, 23—62; C. B. Pratt, 82, 27—65; H. R. Wallace, 90, 23—67; M. Whitlatch, 72, 5—67; E. A. Freeman, 75, 5—70; C. E. Brown, 76, 5—71; Harold Wilcox, 75, 4—71; W. C. Freeman, 80, 7—72; W. F. Dawson, 81, 9—72; J. H. Gannon, Jr., 91, 19—72; J. M. Ward, 76, 4—72; C. E. Rogers, 99, 27—72.

Sheepshead Bay A. C. Games.

The first open meet of the Sheepshead Bay Athletic Club was held on the club grounds yesterday. There was a good entry list and a fair attendance. The feature of the meeting was the one-mile run, which was won by F. Seeley of the Mohawk Athletic Club, who defeated T. Nebrick of Fordham College by about five yards. Summary:

75-Yard Dash, Handicap, Open.—Won by G. E. Peabody, New West Side A. C., (7¼ yards;) H. W. Cody, Pastime A. C., (9 yards,) second; G. E. Hall, Irish-American A. C., (6 yards,) third. Time—0:07 2-5.

SET A NAPHTHA LAUNCH AFIRE

Then Jumped Overboard and Swam—Act of a Bad 14-Year-Old.

On a charge of setting fire to a fifty-foot naphtha launch, George Abachi, fourteen years old, was taken to the Westchester Station last night. Early in the evening the boy went to the pier owned by Mrs. Charles Angus, in Pelham Bay, where there were the naphtha launch Winona and several rowboats, jumped on the launch, lifted the covering of the gasoline tank, threw in a lighted match, and jumped overboard, just as the gasoline exploded.

Mrs. Angus and others in the house heard the explosion, and with the aid of fishermen put out the flames, with a loss of about $150. Abachi swam to shore and ran to the Pelham Bay Bridge, where he stopped to dry his clothing. The police found him there.

CARRIED JEWELS; LOST 'EM.

Unfortunate Result of Mrs. Warriener's Trip to Arverne.

Mrs. May F. Warriener of 291 West One Hundred and Forty-third Street went to Arverne in an automobile yesterday afternoon. She carried her jewelry with her in a tan colored chamois bag, with the idea that they would be safer with her than at home.

Apparently they were not. Last night she reported to the Rockaway Beach police that the bag had vanished. She valued the jewelry in it at $2,000. Just how the bag vanished she could not say. Besides the jewelry there was a $100 bill in the bag. The police have little hope of finding it.

HIGH TREASON CHARGE FAILS.

But Austro-Italians Are Convicted of Lese Majeste and Jailed.

VIENNA, May 30.—The trial here of several Austro-Italians from Trieste, charged with high treason in having engaged in a plot to start a revolution last Summer in the Italian provinces of Austria, ended to-day in the acquittal of the accused on the main charge.

They were, however, found guilty of lèse majesté and of disturbing the peace and sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from six to nine months.

POWER BOATS AT MANHASSET.

Four Close Races Decided in Good Time Off Port Washington.

The first power boat races of the season were contested off Fort Washington yesterday in the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club's opening regatta. The entire mortgaged property, as above set forth, will be sold as a whole. The Trustee may adjourn said sale, and without further notice proceed with said sale on any day to which the same may be adjourned, and may give such further notice thereof as it may think proper. It will receive no bid in respect to the mortgaged property from any one offering to bid who shall not have previously deposited as pledge that he will make good his bid in case it is accepted $25,000 in cash or in certified check or checks on National Bank or Banks or Trust Company or Companies in Philadelphia or New York, made or indorsed payable to order of the Trustee. This deposit received from the successful bidder will be held by the Trustee subject to further order of the Court, to be applied on account of the purchase price of the property for which such bid is made. The Trustee will receive no bid less than the sum of $2,000,000. On acceptance of any bid for the property the purchaser shall forthwith deposit with the Trustee a further sum, which, together with the $25,000 previously deposited, shall equal 10 per cent. of the amount of his bid, said sum to be paid in cash or certified check or checks on any Philadelphia Bank or Banks or Trust Company or Companies in Philadelphia or New York, made or indorsed payable to order of the Trustee. Should he fail forthwith to make such deposit, the Trustee may withdraw such acceptance, and ask for further bids, and the amount previously deposited by such bidder in order to qualify his bid shall be forfeited as a penalty for such failure, and be applied to such purpose as the Court may thereafter direct. Upon receipt of any such further deposit from a successful bidder, all deposits previously made by unsuccessful bidders other than any that may have been forfeited as above shall be returned to them. In case any bidder shall fail, after due acceptance by the Trustee, and deposits as aforesaid, to comply with any order of Court relating to consummation of the purchase, then the sums so deposited by such bidder shall be forfeited as a penalty for such failure, and be applied toward the payment of expenses of resale and making good any deficiency, in case such property shall be sold at price less than that bid at prior sale, or to such other purpose as the Court may direct. If the Court shall not confirm the sale for which deposits have been made, such deposits shall be returned to the bidder. The Court may reject any bid, as also resell the property, upon such notice as it may direct, in case the purchaser thereof shall omit to make payments on account of any unpaid balance of purchase price within 20 days after the entry of an order requiring such payment.

Complainant, the Guaranty Trust Company of New York and any holder or holders of bonds secured by the said Mortgage or any party to this suit may bid and purchase at such sale. Within 30 days after the acceptance by Court of any bid, the purchaser shall have the right to file a written statement, duly acknowledged, rejecting and refusing to take any separate item or items of the property struck down to him or any part of such item, and shall thereupon be entitled to the entry of an order of course and without notice relieving him of his purchase to that extent and amending accordingly the decree confirming the sale, but no such rejection shall operate to reduce the amount of his bid or affect or impair the obligation of such purchaser to pay the full purchase price specified in the decree confirming the sale. The purchaser or purchasers shall be entitled, in making settlement for any payment of the purchase money, to deliver to the Trustee and to turn over and use any of the bonds and matured and unpaid interest secured by said Mortgage toward the payment of said purchase money, reckoning and computing said bonds or interest for that purpose at a sum equal to and not exceeding that which shall be payable out of the net proceeds of said sale to the purchaser or purchasers as the holder or holders of said bonds or interest for his or their just share and proportion in that character of said net proceeds, upon a due accounting and distribution thereof, and after allowing for the proportion of payment which may be required by the Court to be paid in cash for the expense of the Trust and of the sale or for other purposes. Provided, however, that so much of the purchase price shall, in any event, be paid in cash as may be found necessary on a final accounting to pay the distributive share due on such bonds and coupons as may not be used to pay the purchase price bid at the sale, as well as to pay all sums that may be allowed by the Court for costs and expenses, including compensation of Receivers and Master, Counsel fees, etc., the balance remaining unpaid upon Receivers' Certificates, or Indebtedness not represented by Receivers' Certificates, and any sums that may be found to be payable for account of an Indebtedness prior in lien or superior in equity to said Mortgage. For further details, reference is made to the said decree on file in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, Pa.

Facts and Figures

are what I have to lay before you. I can't afford to deal in generalities and hopes nor can you afford to listen to them. I have a fully developed and restricted residential Park at Larchmont on the Sound, known as Larchmont Park, you want a home of your own where the money which you now pay for rent can be invested and saved, not lost. I have something to sell, you want to buy, now, therefore, let us get together. Remember, facts only will be told you and ample opportunity given you to verify them. Can you in justice to your wife, your children, and yourself afford to neglect this opportunity? I think that you will agree with me that you can't.

SHIP'S PERILOUS CARGO.

Dynamite and Powder Below—Gasolene and Naphtha on Deck.

A dangerous cargo left New York yesterday for San Juan, Porto Rico, on board the four-masted schooner Goodwin Stoddard, Capt. Miller. The schooner was practically a floating magazine. The deck load consisted of fifty drums of gasolene, containing fifty gallons each, and one hundred cases of naphtha. In the hold were five tons of dynamite and a large quantity of powder. The cargo will be taken to the Government stores at Porto Rico.

A crew of ten men was on board. Before leaving the upper bay Capt. Miller called them on deck, and said:

"If I catch any one of you smoking or lighting a match you will go overboard to feed the fishes. There ain't going to be any monkey business about it either. Over you'll go."

The schooner lay in the upper bay for several hours before a tugboat Captain could be found who would tow her to the Narrows. She flew big red flags fore and aft on all masts, and along her rail to warn other craft to keep away.

The trip is taken now when favorable weather is probable. Capt. Miller hopes there will not be a collision.

75,000 IN MAY PARTIES.

Central Park Spaces Filled—McManus Delights 7,000 Youngsters.

About 75,000 men, women, and children, mostly children, took part in May parties in Central Park yesterday. These parties began to arrive as early as 9 o'clock, and by the noon hour nearly all the available space in the Park was occupied.

What was believed to be the largest party was given by Assemblyman The. McManus of the Seventeenth District, the crowd numbering more than 7,000. McManus's party, which is an annual affair, was a record breaker in enthusiasm, numbers, and bands. There were six bands. The party went from McManus's residence at 452 West Forty-ninth Street.

Mr. McManus took along as his guests Senator Plunkitt, Timothy P. Sullivan, John J. Delany, Patrick Deakon, John Dooling, James J. Hagan, an dother Tammanyites.

Three large van loads of refreshments were sent to the Park ahead of the children. The vans returned absolutely empty.

The annual May walk and party given by Tammany Leader "Tom" Foley of the Second Assembly District took place yesterday as usual. The festivities were held in Jeannette Park at Coenties Slip.

Ship News by Wireless.

De Forest wireless telegraph messages received in this city at 9 o'clock last night reported the steamship Horatio Hall, which left New York at 5 P. M., as then being fifty miles out, and the City of Atlanta, which left New York at 3 P. M., as being fifty miles scuth of the Scotland Lightship at the same hour.

THIRD ELEVATED TRACK ONLY HOPE OF BRONX

Delegations Will Urge Transit Board to Grant Permission.

SUBWAYS FIVE YEARS AWAY

Tunnels Planned to 138th Street Only and Those Living Beyond Would Pay Two Fares.

Delegations from three leading civic organisations of the Bronx, together with a large number of individual property owners and residents of that borough, will appear before the Rapid Transit Commission to-morrow afternoon to urge the adoption of the plan to construct a third track on the Second and Third Avenue elevated railroad lines, so that an adequate express service can be furnished from the City Hall to the Bronx. With such a structure the Interborough Rapid Transit Company promises an eighteen-minute schedule from City Hall to the Harlem River and a twenty-two-minute schedule from City Hall to One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street.

Many residents of the Bronx, including ex-Justice Ernest Hall of the Supreme Court, announced themselves yesterday as strongly in favor of the elevated road plan on the ground that it could be in full operation to the Harlem River by Fall and to One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street in less than a year, thus relieving the present intolerable congestion on the elevated lines of the east side. None of the proposed subway plans for the relief of the Bronx could be completed in less than five years, and in addition none of the subway lines laid out extends above One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street, thus requiring Bronx passengers for points beyond to pay an additional fare to reach their destinations. The Interborough Company promises a five-cent fare with free transfers between all subway and elevated lines of the system, and in addition promises to pay damages to all property owners along the route without litigation, taking the appraisal of real estate experts as a basis.

Representatives of the North Side Board of Trade, of the Taxpayers' Alliance, and of the Associated Board of Real Estate Brokers will appear before the Rapid Transit Commission under instructions from their organizations to urge the granting of the right to improve the elevated service.

WOULD GIVE PROMPT RELIEF.

"None of the proposed subway plans for the Bronx really gives the section any relief," said ex-Justice Hall yesterday. "Far more than one-half of the entire population of the Bronx lives within easy walking distance of some one or other of the stations of the elevated railroad. The Interborough Company cannot handle any more trains than now are being handled in rush hours on the Second and Third Avenue lines, and there is no relief from the congestion on the two-track structure running from One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street, where the Second and Third Avenue lines join, to One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street, where the three-track structure of the Subway viaduct and the two- track structure of the Suburban line join. Thus four tracks south from One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street and five tracks north of One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street are connected with two tracks which cannot handle the traffic even as it now comes to it.

"The suggestion has been made that the opening of the Subway line under the Harlem River will relieve this congestion of the trains that now come down over the viaduct section, but the suggestion fails to indicate that these through trains from the Bronx will be completely filled when they get to the Harlem River. By improving the elevated service from the Bronx all the Bronx passengers could be sent right through to City Hall and South Ferry on the elevated express trains, and the trains coming down through the Subway would be left for the Harlemites, who would in turn fill them to the limit."

MORGENTHAU FOR THIRD TRACK.

Henry Morgenthau of 20 Nassau Street, one of the largest operators in city real estate, especially in the Washington Heights, Harlem, and Bronx sections is especially strong in his advocacy of the three-track line, and will urge his views on the Rapid Transit Commission.

"By no other means can the swiftly growing population of the Bronx be adequately relieved in the way of transit facilities," said Mr. Morgenthau. "The subways will relieve the Washington Heights section, and also will relieve Harlem, especially if the Bronx travel is diverted so that the through trains will not be completely filled before they get to the Harlem, but the Bronx is absolutely dependent on the improvement of the elevated lines. In three years the travel on the east side lines has increased 36 per cent., and is still on the increase. When one considers the intolerable conditions now existing on these lines it causes a shudder to think what the conditions will be in another three or five years unless the elevated improvements are authorized."

Bronx residents who were approached on the subject yesterday declared themselves strongly in favor of the plan.

"I believe the elevated third-track improvement should be permitted on both Second and Third Avenues," declared F. J. Gein a real estate dealer of 627 East One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street. "We would feel the benefits at once from such an improvement, and there are many reasons why 'L' improvements should not be held back to await the uncertainty that surrounds the subway plans."

J. William Kaiser, who conducts an insurance and real estate business at 633 East One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street, has been working hard to further the third-track proposition.

"Give us the benefit of the additional tracks on the Second and Third Avenue lines," he said yesterday, "and we shall be very grateful. I don't see that we could get any relief for years through subway building. What we want is relief as soon as possible."

WOULD BENEFIT ALL.

R. S. Clarke of 270 Alexander Avenue, in the Bronx, is a warm advocate of the elevated improvement.

"An improvement of the express service," said he, "would benefit every resident of the Bronx."

H. Appman, a merchant of 285 Willis Avenue, declared himself strongly for the elevated improvement.

"There should be no opposition to the proposition from public spirited persons," he said. "I believe every resident of the Bronx wants it, and we cannot wait for the subways. The 'L' service now is intolerable, but we realise that the road can do no better unless it gets permission to improve its facilities."

"The sooner the third track is put in and the express service improved the better it will be for the Bronx," said H. Lehn, a merchant at 633 East One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street. "The additional track is the proper idea, and we need it right now."

Officials of the Interborough yesterday declared it to be their intention to give the Bronx and Harlem an all-day express service in both directions if they can get permission to construct the additional tracks.

"The third-tracking of the east side elevated lines must be authorized if relief is to be given to the great population of the Bronx," said William Barclay Parsons, formerly Chief Engineer of the Rapid Transit Commission, yesterday. "The claim that has been made by opposing traction interests that the elevated improvement would interfere with the building of east side subways is ridiculous. There would be more people in the Bronx than even the improved 'L' could carry by the time the east side subways could be completed."

SCIENCE BY THE YOUNG IDEA.

Horace Mann Pupils Show How to Bake Bread and Build Railroads.

How a school can be a combination of gardens, bakeries, machine shops, and railroad construction buildings was shown at the Horace Mann and Speyer Schools yesterday when the annual exhibit of equipment and work began. Hundreds of visitors learned with surprise that their own and their neighbors' children not only learned the three R's and a few of the more familiar "frills," but also how to print a newspaper, how to bake good bread, how to build boats, how to install an elaborate signal apparatus for a railroad, and dozens of other things equally useful.

The school has grown wonderfully since the last annual exhibit. Departments which were still a part of the nebulous future then are now completed realities. To the east of the big Teachers College Building, of which the elementary and high schools are part, is an enormous garden. Into it the pupils go every day and learn to plant and cultivate flowers and vegetables. A feature of the additions to the school is the gymnasium, which is modern throughout.

In the miniature machine shops, too, there are many things which were not there last year. Lately the boys have been learning how to build a railroad. They mold the steel rails—they are really bead rails, but they look like steel—they hew out the crossties, they make the wheels, the locomotive, the cars, the spikes—everything. A youthful genius has designed and built a new kind of semaphore with all electric appurtenances. As soon as the train runs past, the signal is thrown into the danger position, and when it runs off the block the signal takes the "Go ahead" position again.

The smaller pupils came in for their share of the glory of Horace Mann yesterday when the work of the "primitive life" classes was displayed. The first grade has made an Indian camp with tents, inside of which clay braves sit with their squaws. The little ones got their ideas from a visit to the Museum of Natural History's Indian department.

The show will continue two days longer.

COTILLION IN EAST BROADWAY

Led by Mr. and Mrs. Levy Past Three-Score and Married Forty-five Years.

One hundred guests feasted and danced last evening in Pacific Hall in East Broadway, Manhattan, to celebrate the forty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Levy of South Second Street, Brooklyn. Mr. Levy is seventy years old and his wife is five years his junior. He retired from the wholesale crockery business some years ago. His two sons, a married daughter, and ten grandchildren helped in the celebration.

The tables at which the guests dined were decorated with flowers and illuminated with electric lights. Behind Mr. and Mrs. Levy were displayed in electric lights their names and the dates "1860-1905."

After the dinner a cotillion was led by Mr. and Mrs. Levy. They danced several times in the course of the evening, and all the guests said they showed that they still retained much of the grace and vigor of their youth.

To each guest was presented a souvenir photograph of Mr. and Mrs. Levy in a frame. Mr. Levy's brother came the whole way from Los Angeles for the occasion, and guests were present from Washington, Boston, and Newark. Mr. Levy is a veteran of the civil war, and several old soldiers who fought with him were present in uniform.

FELL IN FRONT OF AN AUTO.

Samuelson Stumbled on a Car Fender After Jamming a Hat.

Samuel Samuelson, a cigarmaker, of 113 Division Street, was run over by an automobile yesterday afternoon and may die of his injuries. He was taken to Hudson Street Hospital by Surgeon Hale, who said he was injured internally.

Samuelson and three other young men had been skylarking in Tryon Row, near the Brooklyn Bridge, and had attracted the attention of detectives of the Oak Street Station. In a spirit of fun Samuelson jammed down the hat of one of his companions and ran off toward City Hall Park. As he crossed Centre Street his foot caught in the fender of a trolley car and he fell in front of an automobile which was passing. The wheels of the machine passed over his body.

Arthur Martin, the chauffeur, was arrested and locked up in the Oak Street Station. The automobile belonged to the Auto Transportation Company, and the occupants of the vehicle were Janson Rigby and his wife, who are stopping at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

HAFFEN FOR SUNDAY BALL.

Will Ask That Games Be Permitted in Public Parks.

Borough President Louis F. Haffen of the Bronx received a delegation of citizens yesterday who called on him in relation to police interference with baseball in the parks of the Bronx on Sunday. Mr. Haffen said:

"I am opposed to the suppression of baseball playing in the public parks on Sunday afternoons. It is the only day in the week when many young men can enjoy such recreation. I am speaking, of course, for the orderly and well-behaved young fellows and not for those who by their conduct bring discredit upon the great American game. Because one or two abuse the Sunday privilege it is no reason why hundreds should be deprived of a day of sport and pleasure."

Borough President Haffen promised that he would write to the Mayor and Police Commissioner requesting that Sunday games be permitted in the public parks.

SAVED BURGLARS' LOOT.

A Small Boy Intervened, but They Got Away.

Burglars got after Isidore Helms, a West Broadway clothing manufacturer, early yesterday morning, packed up $2,000 worth of his stock, and succeeded in lowering numerous bundles of clothing to an adjoining roof. Before they could get away with their booty a small boy intervened, and their enterprise went for naught.

The Helms plant occupies the second and third floors of 497 West Broadway. Next door is a tenement. The thieves walked through to the back yard of the tenement, jumped into the other yard, and broke into Helms's place. While they were carrying off their booty a lad told Patrolman Kiernan that a man was in the hall of No. 495 acting funny. Before Kiernan got there the man had vanished, but Helms's clothing was saved.

Children's Anti-Kidnapping League.

Charged with having attempted to kidnap his niese, Mary Hendricks, James Hendricks, of Hoboken, N. J., a brother of Dr. Charles C. Hendricks of Bennett will case notoriety, was held yesterday in $2,000 bail for future examination when arraigned in the Butler Street Court, Brooklyn. Children living near President and Columbia Streets have organized a sort of protective league to watch the Hendricks youngsters and give an alarm if they see strangers showing a suspicious interest in them.

Capt. Goddard's Funeral This Morning

Men and women in all walks of life who are active in seeking the social betterment of their kind are expected in force at the funeral services of Capt. F. Norton Goddard, at All Souls' Church, Fourth Avenue and Twentieth Street, at 10 o'clock this morning. Members of the Civic Club will assemble at their clubhouse, in Thirty-fourth Street, near Second Avenue, just after 9 o'clock, and will march to the church in a body. The East Side Republican Club will also join in the sad honors.

NO HALL OF RECORDS FOR A YEAR MORE

Interior to be Remodeled at a Cost of $500,000.

FAT FEES FOR ARCHITECTS

Horgan & Slattery Get to Work Again and the Public Will Wait a Year.

Once again the Hall of Records is to be overhauled before opening. This time the overhauling is to cost more than half a million dollars. The opening will be delayed for nearly a year. More fat fees for the architects is said to be the only motive in sight.

The old firm of Horgan & Slattery, installed as architects during the term of Mayor Van Wyck, are still the architects for the big structure. They get 10 per cent. of the cost of the building as fees.

Advertisements have been inserted in The City Record by Borough President Ahearn calling for bids for alterations in every single floor of the building from cellar to attic, for a complete overhauling of everything that has been done, and for the doing of a lot of new things devised by the officials who are to occupy the structure when it is completed.

The advertisement says that a certified check for $250,000 as security must be deposited by the contractors, indicating that the engineers of the Borough President's office estimate the cost of the work to be done at upward of $500,000. In addition there is a clause in the advertisement setting at 200 days the time in which the contractor must complete his contract or suffer penalties. As these 200 days are exclusive of Sundays and holidays, and as the bids are not to be submitted until June 22, the contract will easily keep the building from completion for a year. This is in spite of the pledge that it would be ready for occupancy this Spring.

The advertisement for alterations to the building specifies that they are to be "to the basement, first, second, third, fourth, fifth, fifth mezzanine, sixth, seventh, eighth, and attic floors." In addition the contract is to be for the extension of the electric lighting equipment in the building, the installation and rearrangement of the plumbing and heating apparatus, carpenter and cabinet work, furnishing hardware, metallic and other furniture, painting, furnishing electric light fixtures, marble and bronze, plastering, fireproofing, and other work connected with the completion of the building.

The tenants of the Hall of Records, as scheduled by the committee of the Board of Estimate, named to allot space, will include the Register, County Clerk, Surrogates, Corporation Counsel, City Chamberlain, and the Department of Taxes and Assessments, including the Receiver of Taxes and Bureau of Arrears, which are a part of the Finance Department, but which work directly in connection with the Tax Department. All of these tenants have extensive records, which are to be preserved in the big building.

It seems that the heads of these departments and bureaus have looked over their prospective quarters, and each has decided on certain individualities in the arrangement and finish of his particular suite of offices. This figures largely in the work that is to be done within the hall and will account to a large extent for the delay. Some department heads want the woodwork in their suites to match the furniture; some want one kind of flooring, some another. The result promises to do away much of the artistic effect of the interior work.

The Hall of Records was authorized by the Legislature ten years ago. The first contracts were let by Mayor Strong's administration, and the work was begun in 1896. When Mayor Van Wyck took office he made a fuss over the fact that marble was to cover all the interior walls and got his Board of Estimate to knock out this provision and have the walls in dull plaster like the interior of the Criminal Courts Building.

Mayor Low differed with the Van Wyck idea. His Board of Estimate knocked out the plaster interiors and adopted marble again. This delayed the work three years. Then came other changes in the interior design until finally, after much pounding, the contractors promised a completed building by June 1 of this year.

SOCIALIST CITY TICKET.

Algernon Lee for Mayor and Hooray for Municipal Ownership.

This ticket was nominated at the City Convention of the Social Democrats yesterday in Turn Verein Hall, Lexington Avenue and East Eighty-fifth Street:

For Mayor—ALGERNON LEE of Manhattan.
For Controller—CHARLES W. CAVANAUGH of Brooklyn.
For President of the Board of Aldermen—MORRIS BRAUN of Manhattan.

The nominee for the head of the ticket is the editor of The Worker, a Socialist weekly. He came to New York from the West in 1899, after the old De Leon faction was overthrown here. Cavanaugh is a printer, and lives in the Seventh District in Kings. Braun is Secretary of Cigar Makers' Union No. 144. He has been on the city ticket before.

Benjamin Hanford, as temporary Chairman declared in a ringing speech that "capitalism was hell." The platform of the party assails the Republican and Democratic parties, declares the lease of the Subways a fraud of the city by "corrupt officials," and whoops it up for municipal ownership. The courts are declared to be corrupted by capital.

PRINCESS AND MR. ASTOR SUE

Their Claims Figure in Sale of William Trist Bailey's Property.

The Princess Dolores Radziwill of Paris and William Waldorf Astor of Cliveden-on-Thames, England, had a pecuniary interest in a sale of property owned by William Trist Bailey, which took place yesterday at Far Rockaway.

The claim of the Princess was for $10,000, loaned on a mortgage, and Mr. Astor's claim was for rent of offices in Manhattan. Mr. Bailey, a few years ago, was a heavy operator in Far Rockaway real estate, and owned the large Bayswater Hotel.

Several days ago an arrangement was made by which a syndicate composed of Joseph Cassidy, President of Queens Borough; John Cronin of Far Rockaway, and J. & T. Adikes of Jamaica acquired the Bayswater Hotel property from the Princess, for assets for a sum said to be $20,100. The syndicate will try to make the hotel headquarters for Brooklyn and Queens politicians in Summer.

It was said at the sale yesterday that William Trist Bailey is a relative of Field Marshal Lord Roberts.

RECTOR CALLS FOR $1,000,000

Fordham College Has Been Neglected, Says the Rev. Father Collins.

The new college hall at Fordham College was dedicated yesterday afternoon with appropriate ceremonies. The Rev. John J. Collins, Rector of the college, in his address declared that the institution needed $1,000,000.

"In sixty years," he said, "this college has received $30,000 in gifts. If Columbia College needs a new building to carry out some new fad or other the money is forthcoming, while we, who are more deserving, can get none. I want $1,000,000 and I make the appeal in all seriousness."

During the afternoon Gen. O'Beirne reviewed the cadets of the college.

SUIT TAILORED to Your Order . . . $15

We don't pretend to be magicians. We can't put $15.00 materials in a suit and bring out a $50.00 garment. Such stunts come under "black art," and not tailoring.

We can make a crack-a-jack suit tho' for $15.00. Some tailors might claim such a garment worth $30.00. We simply add that it's no better than $15 should buy.

We're new to you; for that reason we count on making a customer and a name with every garment we produce.

BLUNDER IN LIGHT BILL CALLS MAYOR FROM BED

Senate Clerk Wires Asking Him to Receive Corrected Measure.

HEARING CALLED IN HASTE

A Special Messenger Will Return the Bill to Albany in Time for the Governor to Act.

Mayor McClellan was aroused from his sleep early yesterday morning by a telegram from Col. Lafayette B. Gleason, clerk of the Senate, informing him of the serious mistake which had been made in engrossing the bill fixing the price which the City of New York shall pay for electricity. Col. Gleason said in his telegram that the bill on which the Mayor gave a hearing, and which he then approved, was not in the form in which it passed the Legislature. He asked if the Mayor would receive the measure which had actually passed and act upon it in time to permit Gov. Higgins to deal with it before the expiration of the thirty-day limit on June 4.

As was told in a dispatch from Albany yesterday the bill which was approved by the Mayor did not contain the amendment offered by Senator Cooper, and adopted, increasing the price which may be charged the city for electric lighting in Brooklyn. The bill passed on the day before adjournment, and in the confusion the clerks failed to insert the Cooper amendment in the bill forwarded to the Mayor. That, of course, nullified the Mayor's action, since the bill acted upon by him was not the bill which passed the Legislature.

Mayor McClellan replied to Col. Gleason that he would receive the corrected bill and do everything in his power to facilitate action upon it so that it would reach the Governor in time.

The bill was sent by a special messenger from Albany last night to John O'Brien, the Mayor's secretary, who at once prepared the advertisements for a hearing on the measure to be held Friday. Under the law hearings before the Mayor on legislative measures must be advertised for at least two days.

Mayor McClellan will act upon the bill immediately after the hearing Friday, and he will send it to Albany by special messenger Friday night. It will be in the hands of Gov. Higgins Saturday morning. He has until Sunday night to act upon it.

The mistake made in the electric light bill is the second serious error made in legislation of importance passed by the Legislature. The other was with respect to the Ambler bill, giving to the Excise Commissioner the right to revoke the licenses of hotel keepers who failed to comply with regulations with respect to fireproofing. That bill was amended in the Assembly, and a conference committee was appointed. The Assembly withdrew its amendment, but instead of the bill being reprinted as a Senate bill with the same number which it had when it passed the Senate, it was printed as an Assembly bill with an entirely new number. It was then sent to the Senate inclosed in a Senate jacket.

It was only when the bill reached the Governor that the discovery was made that the bill as it passed the Assembly with its new title, although identical in every other respect, had never passed the Senate. G
